Our chief aim as a family ought to be to grow and develop materially, socially, intellectually, and spiritually. We want the farming community to prosper and grow; we also want the city to thrive and increase in size.

How can we do it? Brother Farmer—brother Business man, it's plainly up to us. This is a family matter of the utmost importance. It deserves our careful consideration. Let's get together, let's stick together and stay stuck.

Did you ever see a family whose motto was "dog eat dog"? There are lots of such families, but I have never seen one that prospered. Have you? No, unselfishness must be the motive of all we do in the family. All must work together towards a common aim in order to get results.

Just so in the community. The growth and development of this city and its adjacent territory should be our common aim. I believe that all of us want to do our share. Every mother's son of us knows that if the country we live in prospers, we are bound to prosper, and if the country goes to the dogs, we are very apt to go along.

Unselfishness can be called by another name—team work. Those who play know the importance of team work. In the modern game it has replaced the "grand stand play" and the "star player". We should learn to apply it in town building if we want to be successful.

SECRETARY CHOSEN.

At the commercial club meeting held last Friday for the especial purpose of selecting a secretary, the choice fell upon G. T. Almen of the Commercial-Normal school.

Mr. Almen is vitally interested in the welfare and development of Thief River Falls, the success of his school depends on it; he is a well educated man, having had as thorough a training as men can procure in the schools of Minnesota today; he is a young man, full of the energy, audacity and progressiveness of youth. We congratulate the Commercial Club and the City of Thief River Falls upon procuring the services of so able, willing and unprejudiced a man as Mr. Gustaf T. Almen.

BISHOP CORBETT AT CROOKSTON.

Next Friday evening, March 17th is St. Patrick's Day. The day will be observed at Crookston, as a general holiday for the entire city, and it is expected that all the surrounding towns will attend. It will be in the nature of the first appearance of the Bishop. The main service will be held at the Opera House in the evening at eight o'clock. A very nice and appropriate program has been prepared. The program includes vocal and instrumental music. The Right Rev. Bishop Corbett will deliver an address and his reputation as a platform speaker is second to none in the state.

Solemn High Mass will be read at the Cathedral at nine o'clock a.m., during which an appropriate sermon will be preached by the Bishop. The new Cathedral School is so nearly completed that it will be thrown open to the public for inspection, and a dinner will be served there by the ladies of the parish. The Crookston Band has been secured and it will discourse music during the day and evening.

There will be no doubt that many people of this city will take the opportunity to visit the new See City of the Diocese and hear Bishop Corbett. Crookston is prepared to entertain a large crowd of visitors.

LORIMER KEEPS SEAT IN SENATE

Long Contest Ends in Victory for Illinois Man.

VOTE FORTY-SIX TO FORTY

Progressive Element of Republican Members and Most of the Democrats Favored Ousting Him.

Washington, March 2.—The senate, by a vote of 46 to 40, sustained William Lorimer's title to a seat for the state of Illinois, defeating the resolution of Senator Beveridge declaring him not legally elected a member of the senate.

Senator Lorimer did not vote because of his interest in the case and Senator Taliaferro was in his seat but did not respond to his name.

The vote of Senator Cullom, Mr. Lorimer's colleague from Illinois, was awaited with great interest. Both sides had claimed him. He voted for Lorimer.

While no pairs were announced Senator Aldrich was paired on other questions with Senator Terrell, both being absent on account of illness. Senator Taliaferro's silence may signify a pair with Senator Frazier, who was absent on account of the death of his mother. Mr. Taliaferro had been understood to be pro-Lorimer.

There is one vacancy, caused by the death of Mr. Hughes of Colorado, leaving the present voting strength of the senate ninety-one and forty-six a quorum. Mr. Lorimer got a majority of the sitting members.

There is a general understanding that Senator Aldrich would have favored Lorimer. Nothing was stated on the floor regarding his attitude The vote in detail follows:

For Lorimer.

Republicans—Bradley, Brandegee, Briggs, Bulkeley, Burnham, Burrows, Carter, Clark of Wyoming, Crane, Cullom, Curtis, Depew, Dick, Dillingham, Dupont, Flint, Frye, Gallinger, Gamble, Guggenheim, Hale, Heyburn, Kean, McCumber, Nixon, Oliver, Penrose, Perkins, Piles, Richardson, Scott, Smoot, Stevenson, Warren, Wetmore.

Democrats—Bailey, Bankhead, Foster, Fletcher, Johnston, Paynter, Simmons, Smith of Maryland, Thornton, Tillman, Watson.

Against Lorimer.

Democrats — Bacon, Chamberlain, Clarke of Arkansas, Culberson, Davis, Gore, Martin, Money, Newlands, Overman, Owen, Percy, Rayner, Shively, Smith of South Carolina, Stone, Swanson, Taylor.

PLEADS GUILTY TO LARCENY

Joseph G. Robin, New York Banker, Now Awaits Sentence.

New York, March 2.—Joseph G. Robin, the fallen banker, pleaded guilty to an indictment charging him with the larceny of $27,000 from the Washington Savings bank, of which he was formerly president. Seven indictments against him remain. He was remanded to the Tombs until March 27, when he will be sentenced.

The collapse of Robin's defense of insanity, put forward by his sister, Dr. Louise Robinovitch, and his counsel, William Travers Jerome, was foreshadowed when it was reported that Robin said he was "tired of all this fooling;" but, nevertheless, it caused a stir in the courtroom.

RESUBMISSION WINS IN MAINE

Appreciates Omission of Immigration of Governor.

Augusta, Me., March 3.—Resubmission to the vote of the people of Maine of the amendment to the state constitution prohibiting the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors lacks only the signature of Governor Frederick W. Plaisted before being put into effect.

Governor Plaisted in his campaign for election repeatedly declared himself in favor of resubmission and his signature to the resolution is anticipated. The matter will then come before the people at a special election to be held next September.

Pretty Bad.

Cavanagh, Forest Ranger

The Great Conservation Novel

By HAMLIN GARLAND

Copyright, 1910, by Hamlin Garland

Lee Virginia looked up brightly. "That seems right to me."

"Ah, yes, but wait! We cattlemen had large herds, and the probabilities were that the calf belonged to some one of us, whereas the cowboy, having no herd at all, knew the maverick belonged to some one's herd. True, the law said it was his, but the law did not mean to reward the freebooter. Yet that is exactly what it did. At first only a few outlaws took advantage of it, but hard years came on, the cattle business became less and less profitable, we were forced to lay off our men, and so at last the range swarmed with idle cowpunchers. Then came the breakdown in our scheme. The cowboys took to 'mavericking' on their own account. Some of them had the grace to go into partnership with some farmer and so claim a small bunch of cows, but others suddenly and miraculously acquired herds of their own. From keeping within the law they passed to violent methods. They slit the tongues of calves for the purpose of separating them from their mothers. Finding he could not suck, bossy would at last wander away from his dam and so become a maverick. In short, anarchy reigned on the range."

"But surely my father had nothing to do with this?"

"No; your father up to this time had been on good terms with everybody. He had a small herd of cattle down the river, which he owned in common with a man named Hart."

"I remember him."

"He was well thought of by all the big outfits, and when the situation became intolerable and we got together to weed out 'the rustlers,' as these cattle thieves were called, your father was approached and converted to a belief in drastic measures. He had suffered less than the rest of us because of his small herd and the fact that he was very popular among the cowboys. So far as I was concerned, the use of violent methods revolted me. My training in the east had made me a respecter of the law. 'Change the law,' I said. 'The law is all right,' they replied; 'the trouble is with these rustlers. We'll hang a few of 'em, and that will break up the business.'"

Parts of this story came back to the girl's mind, producing momentary flashes of perfect recollection. She heard again the voices of excited men arguing over and over the question of "mavericking," and she saw her father as he rode up to the house that last day before he went south.

Redfield went on. "The whole plan as developed was silly, and I wonder still that Ed Wetherford, who knew the 'nester' and the cowboy so well, should have lent his aid to it. The cattlemen, some from Cheyenne, some from Denver and a few from New York and Chicago, agreed to finance a a sort of vigilante corps composed of men from the outside on the understanding that this policing body should be commanded by one of their own number. Your father was chosen second in command and was to guide the party, for he knew almost every one of the rustlers and could ride directly to their doors."

"I wish he hadn't done that," murmured the girl.

"I must be frank with you, Virginia. I can't excuse that in him. It was a kind of treachery. He must have been warped by his associates. They convinced him by some means that it was his duty, and one fine day the Fork was startled by a messenger who rode in to say that the cattle barons were coming with a hundred Texas bad men 'to clean out the town' and to put their own men into office. This last was silly rot to me, but the people believed it."

The girl was tingling now. "I remember! I remember the men who rode into the town to give the alarm. I was scared almost breathless."

"I was in Sulphur City and did not hear of it till it was nearly all over," Redfield resumed, his speech showing a little of the excitement which thrilled through the girl's voice. "Well, the first act of vengeance was so ill considered that it practically ended the whole campaign. The invaders fell upon and killed two ranchers, one of whom was probably not a rustler at all, but a peaceable settler, and the other one they most barbarously hanged. More than this, they attacked and vainly tried to kill two settlers whom they met on the road—German farmers, with no connection, so far as known, with the thieves. These men escaped and gave the alarm. In a few hours the whole range was aflame with vengeful fire. The Forks, as you may recall, was like a swarm of bumblebees. Every man and boy was armed and mounted. The storekeepers distributed guns and ammunition, leaders developed, and the embattled 'punkin rollers,' rustlers and townsmen rode out to meet the invaders."

The girl paled with memory of it. "It was terrible. I went all day without eating, and for two nights we were all too excited to sleep. It seemed as if the world were coming to an end. Mother cried because they wouldn't let her go with them. She didn't know father was leading the other army."

"She must have known soon, for it was reported that your father was among them. She certainly knew when they were driven to earth in that log fort, for they were obliged to restrain her by force from going to your father. As I run over those furious days it all seems incredible, like a sudden reversion to barbarism."

"How did it all end? The soldiers came, didn't they?"

"Yes; the long arm of Uncle Sam reached out and took hold upon the necks of both parties. I guess your father and his band would have died right there had not the regular army interfered. It only required a sergeant wearing Uncle Sam's uniform to come among those armed and furious cowboys and remove their prisoners."

"I saw that. It was very strange—that sergeant was so young and so brave."

He turned and smiled at her. "Do you know who that was?"

Her eyes flashed. She drew her breath with a gasp. "Was it Mr. Cavanagh?"

"Yes, it was Ross. He was serving in the regular army at the time. He has told me since that he felt no fear whatever. 'Uncle Sam's blue coat was like Siegfried's magic armor,' he said. 'It was the kind of thing the mounted police of Canada had been called upon to do many a time, and I went in and got my men.' That ended the war, so far as violent measures went, and it really ended the sovereignty of the cattleman. The power of the 'nester' has steadily increased from that moment."

"But my father—what became of him? They took him away to the east, and that is all I ever knew. What do you think became of him?"

"I could never make up my mind. All sorts of rumors come to us concerning him. As a matter of fact, the state authorities sympathized with the cattle barons, and my own opinion is that your father was permitted to escape. He was afterward seen in Texas, and later it was reported that he had been killed there."

The girl sat still, listening to the tireless whir of the machine and looking out at the purpling range with tear mist eyes. At last she said, "I shall never think of my father as a bad man—he was always so gentle to me."

"You need not condemn him, my dear young lady. The people of the Forks—some of them, at least—consider him a traitor and regard you as the daughter of a renegade, but what does it matter? Each year sees the old west diminish, and already, in the work of the forest service, law and order advance. Notwithstanding all the shouting of herders and the beating to death of sheep, no hostile shot has ever been fired within the bounds of a national forest. In the work of the forest rangers lies the hope of ultimate peace and order over all the public lands.

The girl fell silent again, her mind filled with larger conceptions of life than her judgment had hitherto been called upon to meet. She knew that Redfield was right, and yet that world of the past—the world of the swift herdsman and his trampling, long horned, half wild kine—still appealed to her imagination. The west of her girlhood seemed heroic in memory. Even the quiet account of it to which she had just listened could not conceal its epic largeness of movement. The part which troubled her most was her father's treachery to his neighbors. That he should fight, that he should kill men in honorable warfare, she could understand, but not his recreancy, his desertion of her mother and herself.

She came back to dwell at last on the action of that slim young soldier who had calmly ridden through the infuriated mob. She remembered that she had thrilled even then at the vague and impersonal power which he represented. To her childish mind he seemed to bear a charm, like the heroes of her story books—something which made him invulnerable.

After a long pause Redfield spoke again. "The memory of your father will make life for a time a bit hard for you in Roaring Fork. Perhaps your mother's advice is sound. Why not come to Sulphur City, which is almost entirely of the new spirit?"

"If I can get my mother to come, too, I will be glad to do so, for I hate the Fork. But I will not leave her there, sick and alone."

"Much depends upon the doctor's examination tomorrow."

They had topped the divide now between the Fork and Sulphur creek basin, and the green fields, the alfalfa meadows and the painted farmhouses thickened beneath them. Strange how significant all these signs were now! A few days ago they had appeared doubtful improvements; now they represented the oncoming dominion of the east. They meant cleanliness and decent speech, good bread and sweet butter.

Redfield swept through the town, then turned up the stream directly toward the high wall of the range, which was ragged and abrupt at this point. They passed several charming farmhouses, and the western sky grew ever more glorious with its plum color and saffron, and the range reasserted its mastery [illegible] they came to the [illegible] and there, in [illegible] of lofty cotton[illegible] passed before a [illegible] ed the [illegible] driveway [illegible] mingling [illegible] pine tree [illegible] fess[illegible]

Easy to Please.

"So," said his girl's papa furiously, "you think you could make my little girl Arethusa happy?"

The young man considered his prospective pa-in-law, who had gout and a face like a fire engine and an eighty horsepower temper.

"She's been happy with you, sir, hasn't she?" the young man asked.

"I think so, my boy—I think so," replied his girl's papa. "I certainly think so. I think so certainly. I'm certain I think so."

"Well," chimed in the young man sweetly, "if she's been happy with you I certainly think I can make her happy. I think so. I think so certainly. I'm certain I think so."

SENATOR CHOSEN FROM MONTANA

Judge Henry L. Myers Succeeds Thomas H. Carter.

Helena, Mont., March 3.—After seven hours and a half of continuous balloting the twelfth assembly elected Judge Henry L. Myers of Hamilton United States senator to succeed Thomas H. Carter.

Heretofore unthought or unheard of as a candidate his name was injected into the senatorial controversy just at the psychological moment and at a time when sharp conflicts of opinion had the Democrats hopelessly deadlocked on every one that had been named. The introduction of Judge Myers' name was hailed with acclamation by both sides, the supporters of Walsh and Conrad included.

Representative Woody suggested him as a compromise. Senator Conrew was first to vote for him and then followed a stampede of the Democrats that ended only after the members of the majority had named him as their choice.

OFFICIAL PAPER OF THE CITY

FRIDAY MORNING, MAR. 10, 1911

This looks like a fine and early opening for spring work but then one crow never made a summer.

He who is never willing to earn more than he gets does not need to look for a raise in salary.

Large petitions have been received by the State legislature from women of the state asking that the solons do not pass the Women's Suffrage Bill.

Mexico is in continual uproar and now Texas is being so severely embarassed that it has become necessary to send troops to that state for protection. This looks like another Mexican War. What fools these mortals be.

The tonnage tax issue is again to be fought thru the legislature. It does seem that if the legislature shall continue to donate a five-million at a time to our State "U" they would need to begin to plan on getting in at least a couple million annually from our states' greatest industry.

Because you do not know just what to do or how to do it that does not justify you in sitting down and doing nothing. It is your business to rustle and keep right on rustling whether you succeed in doing something or not. You do your best and chances are ninety-nine out of a hundred, things will come your way after a while.

Secretary of the Interior, R. A. Ballinger's resignation was accepted by President Taft after he had expressed his sincere regret at the condition which caused the resignation. The President has chosen Walter L. Fisher of Chicago to take his place. Mr. Ballinger declares that now he will have things investigated. It looks rather as tho he resigned to draw out of the lime-light than to get into it.

JOIN HANDS.

Last week comment on the conclusion of the county division fight by the Red Lake Falls Gazette was strictly alright. We believe in letting this fight be bygones and in getting together and doing what little we can to help build up all adjoining counties not even excepting Red Lake. Red Lake county has some very beautiful senery and is also fortunate enough to have very good soil in by far the greater part of the county. Its people are made of practically the same stuff as the rest of us mortals and now that we no longer have any sectional differences it would seem foolish for the people of either county to continue any hard feeling or to throw anything in the way of their neighbors that would not be conducive to their happiness. If we were able to boost land values in Pennington county twenty-five per cent it is absolutely certain that lands in Red Lake would go up at least twenty per cent and vice-versa if lands in Red Lake counwere to increase twenty-five per cent the lands in Pennington county would without effort go up at least twenty per cent. This would not hold true in the matter of land values but in the values of any products of either county. Hence we would urge that each and every one of us forget the late unpleasantness and join hands in making our immediate neighborhood the most enterprising and progressive part of Northern Minnesota.

FARMER'S INSTITUTE.

Prof. A. D. Wilson who has charge of the farmers' institutes for this state has decided on Thursday and Friday, March 23rd and 24th, as the dates on which will be held a two days' institute in the gymnasium of the high school. This meeting will be supplied with four men institute specialists and one lady, all of whom will be as competent as the state can supply. The meeting will be held under the auspices of the recently organized Upper Minnesota Corn Growers' Association and the agricultural department of the local high school. It will close the series of farmers' meetings which have been provided free this winter through the agency of the high school.

A pure seed contest will also be held in connection with the institute and the corn proposition will be emphasized. Premiums will be offered which will compel the attendance of a large number of contestants and the contest will be open to all the counties in northwestern and central upper Minnesota. The premiums will be published and mailed next week. Competent judges will be on hand to make fair decisions. On the evening of Thursday, a popular entertainment will be presented which will be free to all in the city. No fees for entering this contest will be charged and everybody is requested to make the two days' institute and the seed contest as public as poccible. The papers of next week will have the full particulars of the meeting.

A PRINTER'S LOVE LETTER UP TO DATE.

A printer man was once assailed
By Cupid, and his heart impaled
With love's keen dart.
This printer ran a Linotype;
One day he thought the time was ripe
To show his heart.
He said: "I guess I'd better write-
Declare myself in black and white-
I'll send a letter.
But I'm so busy I can't think
To put it down with pen and ink-
On my machine I'll set 'er."
"Dear Maud"—this way the letter ran-
"I'd like to ask you if you can Become my ueen?
I love you like agentbngyhsee—
! : !-nthbz—456thannthenuthbamboo—tree—
Dathnghamnthis machine!
"Excuse mistakes—I'm in a hurry
Ilove you, dear, so don't you worry-
This I mean.
I love you like Rphnma; thghiworse
Thangutmam thepthnabethen ahtcurse
This machine!"
The maiden at once understood,
As any printer's loved one would,
This language dim.
A case of "pi," she knew, I trow,
Deciphered it; this maiden now
Bakes pie for him!

MOST FLAX OF POOR QUALITY.

Leading Crushers Will Offer Good Sowing Products to Get Good Crop.

Duluth, March 6.—The leading flax-seed crushers and seed men have rallied to the support of the Northwestern farmer and will aid him to procure first-class seed for planting in the coming spring. From 30,000,000 bushels a few years ago the Northwestern flax-seed crop has decreased to between 9,000,000 and 10,000,000 bushels this year. Farmers have been protected against foreign seed, but they have permitted the crop to dwindle to such a low volume that it will be necessary to import in this crop year from ten to twelve million bushels of seed on which a duty of 25 cents a bushel must be paid.

The campaign of the American linseed crushers to prevent the extinction of the flaxseed crop in this country began in the Northwest today. About 10,000 letters were sent to farmers and elevators in the Northwest by E. H. Smith of Duluth flax man for the American Linseed company, asking for information as to the requirements of farmers for first-class seed.

Bureau to Distribute Seed.

Arrangements were also started today for the establishment of a bureau at Fargo, N. D., thru which the big seed companies will distribute good flaxseed to farmers who need it. In the campaign of education the newspapers of the Northwest are being utilized.

BOYS' AND GIRLS' SHORT COURSE.

The Minneapolis School of Agriculture has inaugurated a new educational feature, nothing less than a short course of a week's duration planned especially for boys and girls. The course will begin March 27 and will end a week later.

The expense of such a short course to the individual pupil will be nominal, including only the railway fare from the student's home town to Minneapolis or St. Paul, $2 for room and board at the school and $1 for street car fare for the various excursions planned.

It would prove a fine experience for the boys and girls of Pennington county to witness the workings of the School of Agriculture and to see the many sights of the twin cities, besides the large fund of practical knowledge they will gain in the class room during the week. There should be a goodly number from Pennington county at this short course. The boys and girls will be met at the depots by competent guides and none need fear getting lost.

The boys will study wheat, corn, oats, potatoes and stock while the girls will be kept busy with their sewing and cooking. During the week, sight seeing excursions will be made to the Capitol, Minneapolis and Stillwater.

For further particulars write the county superintendent or to Geo. F. Howard, 1281 Reymond Ave, St. Paul.

NOTICE TO STOCK HOLDERS OF FARMER'S ELEVATOR.

March 1, 1911.

A stock-holders meeting of the Farmers' Elevator company will be held at the Armory Hall in the city of Thief River Falls, Minn., on Monday the 13th, day of March, 1911, at 1:30 o'clock in the afternoon, for the purpose of ratifying the proposed by laws, or ammending them, and also to elect two directors, to fill the places of the two who have failed to qualify.

Every person who is interested in the success of the enterprise must be sure to attend this meeting for some more shares must be sold before we can build, or go into business.

Shareholders should attend this meeting so as to help decide on what bases profits shall be distributed, as a strong sentiment exists for distribution on the basis of grain sold to this company, and also a strong sentiment favoring distribution on the basis of number of shares held.

Yours for the success of Farmers' Elevator.

The Committee.

ATTACKS SCHOOL PRINCIPAL.

A severe attack on school Principal Chas. B. Allen, of Sylvania, Ga., is thus told by him. "For more than three years," he writes "I suffered indescribable torture from rheumatism, liver and stomach trouble and diseased kindneys. All remedies failed till I used Electric Bitters, but four bottles of this wonderful remedy cured me completely." Such results are common. Thousands bless them for curing stomach trouble, female complaints, kidney disorders, billousness, and for new health and vigor. Try them. Only 50c at all Druggists.

The Outdoor Nation.

No nation loves nature so much as the German. The Italian travels to get somewhere, the German to travel. The country walk for its own sake is a German discovery. The Englishman's ideal is a park, the German's a wood, and the Frenchman loves his boulevard.—Hamburger Zeitung.

SCHOOL NOTES

A well attended meeting of the ladies was held last Thursday afternoon at the Lincoln assembly room. It was adjourned to Thursday, March 16th at 3:45 p. m., at the same place, when a constitution and bylaws will be adopted. The proposed organization will be directed and controlled entirely by the mothers and ought to receive the encouragement of every person in the city who is interested in the welfare of the children. All ladies are invited to be present at the next meeting.

Governor Eberhart wrote his name on the Lincoln assembly blackboard the day of dedication. It remains there yet and is a most excellent specimen of good penmanship.

A bill calling for the establishment of a sixth state normal school for northern Minnesota will be introduced into the legislature next week. It will be general in character and will leave the location of a site to one of the state boards.

Two agricultural meetings were held last Wednesday in the country south of town by the department of the high school. Prof. Kirkpatrick of the state college of agriculture had the meetings in charge. Both were well attended.

Dr. Chesley of the state board of health visited the schools last Friday and examined the children for indications of contagious diseases. He came without announcement or knowledge of the school authorities.

The senior class play will be presented at the Auditorium on Friday, March 31st. The students are diligently practising their parts and it is believed that the class of 1911 will maintain the high standard for amateur work set by the classes of former years.

Interesting exhibits of the students' work are hung in all the grade rooms. Parents might spend an hour or two very well in visiting the rooms where their children attend and examining the work.

Superintendent L. V. Koos of the Red Lake Falls school and County Superintendent Anderson of the Red Lake county schools visited the local schools last Monday and Tuesday.

The Putnam bill, which is now pending in the legislature and which promises to become law, provides for twenty agricultural high schools in addition to the ten now established. The local school will make application to become one of the lucky twenty, though it is admitted that at least 100 high schools will make a fight to get on the list. The chances for the local institution are considered excellent, but nothing of this nature is certain where so many factors enter into the contest. Each school so designated will receive an annual gift from the state of $2500 and this may be increased to at least $3000 under some conditions. It is certain nothing will be left undone by the school authorities to secure one of the coveted places.

MINNEAPOLIS SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA TO BE HERE

Miss Huldah Vvedisech, representative of tthe Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra, is in the city for a few days looking after the interests of the famous Orchestra.

Music lovers of this city are looking forward to the coming of this splendid body of musicians.

The people of Minneapolis subscribe $55,000 a year to maintain this orchestra, and it is to be hoped that the $500 needed to insure their coming to Thief River Falls will soon be subscribed for.

The orchestra carries 50 men, all artists and five splendid soloists.

Emil Oberhoffer has been director ever since it was organized 8 years ago and to his genius and ability, is due the success and high standard attained by them.

Five splendid soloists will appear with tthe orchestra —Lucile Tewksbury, Soprano; Geneveive Wheat, Contralto; Marcus Kellerman, Basso Chas. Hargraves, Tenor and Carlo Fischer, Cellist.

WAR ON TUBERCULOSIS

The German System Of Caring For The Consumptive Population.

Germany leads the world in the fight against tuberculosis. A German, the immortal Dr. Koch, discovered the cause of tubeculosis in '82 and so made possible its prevention. Since then the death rate has been halved. Soon after this the German Government instituted universal working mens' insurance against accident and sickness. In 1893 invalidity (or chronic disability) and old age insurance were introduced and special company hospitals and medical service established. It was soon discovered that the consumptives constituted by far the largest class of chronic invalids. So special hospitals or senatoria were established out of insurance funds and the consumptive insured treated free. This was in 1897. Since then according to the latest statitics by the head of the German insurance system Private Counciler Bielfeldt, 275,000 consumptives have been treated at a total cost of over twenty-five million dollars (100,000,000 marks). The cost per person treated has increased somewhat being now nearly one hundred dollars. And this enormous expenditure has not bankrupted the insurance companies for two reasons: First, because there has been no "graft" or profit, the government handling the funds, and second because multitudes have been restored to wage earning capacity. Here are the latest figures: Of every 100 men treated in 1905, 44 were in good condition, i. e. "economically cured" and able to work in 1909, and of every 100 women, 52 were "economically cured" after 49 years of age.

There are now 71 insurance sanatoria and infirmaries in Germany.

REINER.

Lars Runnestrand died last Tuesday from a few days attack of pleurisy. The funeral was held last last Friday. The ceremony was conducted by Rev. Bredeson. Mr. Runnestrand leaves a wife and four children to mourn his death.

John Sorenson, the cattle buyer spent last week out here buying cattle. He purchased the steok of Mrs. Julius Hermanson, and four head from Mikkel Anderson, two 3 year old steers for which he paid ninety dollars.

T. Tunheim and L. Roseland made a trip to Pea Soup Island last Friday Their intention was to buy cattle but if they bought any or not we do not know.

A few from this vicinity took in the auction sale at J. Trenda's last Saturday. The reports were "every thing was well paid for."

A couple of young fellows were out hunting the other day and they reported rabbits were scarce, but we believe they did not hunt for the rabbits that have their shelter in the woods. They must have found some tracks of those that shelter under a good roof.

P. C. Wold was up here last week and sold part of the Julius Hermanson property.

All the telephone lines were torn down one night at the Torgerson store and it caused cross talk all over the country.

DENIES REQUEST OF RAILROADS

EAGER TO INCREASE TARIFFS

Carriers Asked Permission Voluntarily to Suspend Proposed Advances In Freight Rates From March 15 to Nov. 1 In Order That They Might Have an Opportunity to Ascertain General Results of This Year's Business.

Washington, March 7.—Denial of the request of the railways of official classification territory that they be permitted voluntarily to suspend proposed advances in class freight rates from March 15 until Nov. 1 next was made by the interstate commerce commission.

In the decisions announced in the great rate cases ten days ago the commission directed the proposed tariffs advancing rates be annulled on or before March 10. If this direction were not followed the commission announced that on that date it would issue an order canceling the rates and putting into effect for at least two years the existing rates.

After a conference in New York city last Friday an arrangement was made for a conference in this city between Eastern railroad officials and the members of the commission.

Participating in the conference were President W. C. Brown and General Solicitor Clyde Brown of the New York Central, President James McCrea and General Counsel F. I. Gowen of the Pennsylvania, President Daniel Willard and General Counsel Hugh G. Bond of the Baltimore and Ohio, President Frederick Underwood and General Counsel George Brownell of the Erie and Walker D. Hines, representing the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western.

It was suggested to the commission that the carriers in official classification territory be permitted to suspend voluntarily the tariffs proposing advances from March 15 until Nov. 1 next, in order that they might have opportunity to ascertain the general results of this fiscal year's business.

Their contention was that this year's business might show a falling off of the revenue of 1910, which would afford them an opportunity again to ask the commission to consider an advance in rates, perhaps some time late next autumn, when they would be enabled to make a better showing in support of the request than they made in the recent cases.

They desired also to ascertain whether the record made in the recent cases would be available in any future proceedings they might institute.

Denial of the request for further postponement of the tariffs was made in a letter to President Brown of the New York Central, written by Commissioner Prouty on behalf of the commission.

SHOOTS TO DEFEND MOTHER

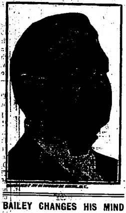
Boy of Fifteen Wounds Stepfather Because Parent Is Beaten.

Milwaukee, March 7.—Angered at seeing his mother beaten and bruised Harold Brown, aged fifteen, shot and wounded his stepfather, Fred Brown, aged forty-five, on a farm south of town. Young Brown fired the shot from a rifle, striking his stepfather in the cheek, inflicting a glancing wound. Brown was not seriously wounded.

After an investigation the district attorney refused to issue a warrant, saying the act of the lad was justified. The boy was later released and returned to his mother.

JOSEPH W. BAILEY.

Resigns From Senate, but Later Changes His Mind.



BAILEY CHANGES HIS MIND

Resigns From Senate, but Later Reverses Decision.

Washington, March 4.—In a burst of indignation over the trend of Democracy in the senate, Senator Bailey (Dem., Tex.) resigned his seat in that body at noon today and this evening took it back again. Excitement over his first action gave way to surprise that he had reversed in so short a time a decision of such importance.

Bailey's resignation, sent by wire to the governor of Texas, was not only declined by the governor, but hundreds of Texans wired him to stick to his job in the senate.

His Democratic colleagues took him in hand and, in a long conference urged that he made a grave mistake. Their persuasion finally won him over and Bailey agreed not to leave them

NINETY KILLED IN FIRE PANIC

Flames Destroy Moving Picture Theater in Russia.

St. Petersburg, March 7.—Ninety persons, mostly children, were burned and trampled to death in a fire that destroyed a moving picture theater at Belogoe. Forty persons were injured, many seriously.

The theater was an old building and caught fire from the picture machine.

Five hundred persons were in the building and they immediately made a mad rush for the narrow doors at the rear.

All might have escaped had order been preserved, but the exits were soon clogged by the scramble.

The men in attendance beat down the women and children, their cowardice being described as barbarous.

But few of the bodies were recognizable.

DEITZ CASES ARE POSTPONED

Trial of Wisconsin Family Will Take Place In May.

Hayward, Wis., March 7.—In one of the strangest legal proceedings ever enacted in a country courthouse the trial of John F. Deitz, Mrs. Deitz and Leslie for the alleged murder of Deputy Oscar Harp was again continued until Tuesday, May 2. Deitz persisted, in the face of well spoken and sincere advice from Circuit Judge A. R. Reid, in his announcement that he would have nothing more to do with attorneys in his own behalf. He says he will conduct his defense himself.

STILL VOTING DEMOCRATIC Party Makes Gains In Elections In Maine Cities.

Portland, Me., March 7.—The rumblings of the Democratic landslide that began in Maine's state election last fall and affected the country at large continued in the annual municipal elections in eleven of Maine's twenty cities when six Democratic mayors were chosen as against three in the same place a year ago, while in one city, Saco, the mayor ran on a Democratic-Citizens' ticket.

WEST VIRGINIA MUST PAY

Supreme Court Decides $7,182,507 Is Share of Old State Debt.

Washington, March 7.—The sum of $7,182,507 was held by the supreme court of the United States to be the proportion of the $33,000,000 old Virginia state debt which West Virginia is under obligations to bear. The court left the final determination of the matter, including the question of interest, to the states to decide by conference.

Aldrich Returning to Washington.

Washington, March 7.—Former Senator Nelson W. Aldrich is expected in Washington and he has directed that a meeting of the monetary commission be called for Thursday next.

PRESSURE ON THE GOVERNOR

Burke of North Dakota Urged to Veto New Drug Permit Bill.

Bismarck, N. D., March 7.—Efforts to have Governor Burke veto the Cashel bill relating to druggist permits are being made by prohibition and law enforcement bodies. This bill provides that in emergency cases druggists not holding permits may make sales of liquor. It is contended this will let down the bars as no restrictions or method of determining "emergency" cases is provided in the bill.

TARIFF BOARD BILL KILLED

House Fillbusters During Closing Hours of Congress.

SUPPLY MEASURES PASSED

Canadian Reciprocity Defeated Because of Failure of Senate to Act on the Matter.

Washington, March 5.—The Sixty-first congress expired by constitutional limitation and will reassemble April 4 in special session.

Despite the peril that threatened some of the big appropriation bills almost up to the last moment they all finally got through and received the signature of the president. The last bill signed by the speaker of the house was the postoffice appropriation act.

The close of the session was exciting in both houses. A filibuster in the house was successful in killing the tariff board bill.

The Canadian reciprocity agreement died in the senate, the McCall bill embodying its provisions having passed the house only.

Filibusters in both houses lasted until within a bare half hour of adjournment. Much bitterness of feeling was exhibited, but finally the blockade gave way and the session on both sides ended with the usual felicitations, though the certainty of an extra session hung cloudlike over the final moments.

In the house the venerable speaker, Mr. Cannon, laid down his gavel probably for the last time, after complimentary remarks by his successor to be, Champ Clark of Missouri, who led the unanimous cheers of the house for "Uncle Joe." The house took a recess during which the speaker delivered his valedictory.

On being conducted back to the chair upon conclusion of his speech the speaker, at 12:35 o'clock, declared the house of representatives adjourned. There ensued a scene of rejoicing and song singing that was in striking contrast with the more violent scenes of but a few minutes before.

DROPS POSTAL RATE PROBE

House Defeats Plan for Second Class Matter Investigation.

Washington, March 5.—Leaving out the provision for a commission to investigate all facts pertaining to second class mail matter, the postoffice appropriation bill was passed finally by the house. In the last conference between the two houses the provision was dropped out, disposing of the plan to appropriate $50,000 for such an investigation.

Chairman Weeks of the postoffice committee, prior to the final conference, urged the acceptance of the senate amendment. Representative Moon of Tennessee, one of the house conferees on the bill, opposed the amendment, declaring full investigation had been made of all second class mail conditions by previous commissions. He held that until congress should act on the report of the last postal commission the apportionment of a new commission was not advisable.

The house agreed to the final conference report without opposition.

SULLOWAY MEASURE FAILS

Withdrawn Just Prior to Adjournment of Session.

Washington, March 5.—A blockade of the big appropriation bills, threatened by Senator Owen of Oklahoma, gave way when he agreed to yield the floor if the senate would agree to vote on a proposition to couple Arizona with New Mexico in a resolution admitting them to the Union as states.

This coupling was agreed to, but the resolution as thus amended was defeated, ayes 39, noes 45. The parliamentary situation was much tangled. It developed, however, that, in voting to defeat the coupling of Arizona with New Mexico the senate had defeated the ratification of the New Mexico constitution as well.

By a vote of 44 to 37 the senate took up the Sulloway general pension bill, which would increase the pension rolls about $50,000,000 a year. It had already passed the house. A filibuster developed and the bill was withdrawn.

PROSECUTION IS ORDERED

Chicago Clothing Manufacturers Maintained a Blacklist.

Chicago, March 3.—Attorney General Stead, at Springfield, was ordered by the strike investigating committee of the state senate to begin criminal prosecutions against Chicago clothing manufacturers who are accused in the committees report of maintaining a blacklist.

The committee investigated the strike of garment workers in this city and declares that the clothiers maintained a card index system which was in effect a boycott and blacklist, which prevented "undesirable" workers from obtaining employment.

That is the bitterest of all, to wear the yoke of your own wrongdoing.—Eliot.

The Vacant Literary Throne.

There is, we must admit, today no monarch in any tongue upon the literary throne, no sovereign world name in poetry or prose, in whom, as has happened before now, not so many generations ago, in royal succession to Scott, Byron, Goethe, Hugo, Tolstoy, all the civilized world—Teuton, Latin, Celt, Slav, oriental—is interested, for whose new works it looks or where it seeks the gospel of the day. Nabochlish, to use an Irish word that became a favorite with Sir Walter Scott, it does not matter. Do not let us nurse the humor of the despondent editor who mournfully told his readers, "No new epic this month."

Nobody can tell how the wonders of language are performed nor how a book comes into the world. Genius is genius. The lamp that today some may think burns low will be replenished. New orbs will bring light. Literature may be trusted to take care of itself, for it is the transcript of the drama of life, with all its actors, moods and strange flashing fortunes. The curiosity that it meets is perpetual and insatiable, and the impulses that inspire it can never be extinguished.—John Morley.

Thrifty Harry Lauder.

There are many stories told of the wonderful thrift of Harry Lauder, the Scotch comedian. Once when Lauder was in New York he was in a wine buying party at the Astor. Everybody but the Scot bought wine. When it came his turn to buy he sighed.

"Well, boys," he said, "it's my turn to treat. Come along with me. I've got a fine bottle of old Scotch up in my room. I brought it over with me."

On another occasion he was with a drinking party and instead of liquor he took cigars, for which those who treated him paid 50 cents apiece. Harry put all but one in his pocket. He spent two hours smoking that one. After the drinking was over the little comedian went to the cigar counter and said to the man in charge, "I say, man, wud ye mind givin' me ten cent cigars for these fafty cent ones?" The exchange was made, and Harry went to his room with five times as many cigars as he had at the start.

Thought It Was Serious.

The burning of the famous Greyfriars church in Edinburgh occurred one Sunday morning, and the young people of a house which backed upon the churchyard were among the first, as they were preparing to start for church, to observe the flames. It was the housemaid's Sunday out, and old Kitty, the cook, was that day responsible for her duties. Hearing unwonted commotion and excited outcries upstairs, she came panting and hobbling up from her basement kitchen, crying anxiously at each stair:

"Oh, what is't? What is't?"

"Oh, Kitty, look here!" cried one of the girls from a window. "Greyfriars church is burning up."

Kitty dropped limply on a settee.

"Is that a', miss?" she grumbled between gasps. "What a fright ye geed me! I thicht ye said the parlor fire was out."—Youth's Companion.

Blending the Odors.

It has been proved that two odors which do not seem to have anything in common, that of putrefied cheese and that of pineapple, are so closely allied from the chemical standpoint that it takes but a few minutes to transform an intense stench into a sweet fragrance. This curious experiment is easily made and requires but a small amount of three chemicals—valerianic acid, sulphuric acid and amylic alcohol. Care must be taken not to spill over the fingers or dress any drop of the first two named liquids. Sulphuric acid is exceedingly caustic and the stench of valerianic acid, besides being unendurable, is very difficult to get rid of.—London Family Herald.

The Caddie's Advice.

A famous woman golfer was talking about the St. Andrews links.

"And as wonderful as the links," she said, "are the caddies. The Scotch caddie is the quaintest of mortals. For instance: "I had skied a lot of balls one morning, much to my caddie's disgust. Finally he teed a ball for me and then, handing me my driver, remarked:

"'Noo, leddy, let's see a guid shot, and nae mair o' yer glory hallelujahs!'"

Mrs. George Parenteau, 322 S. Duluth Ave., Thief River Falls, Minn., says: "I was greatly worried over my little girl's condition. She was a constant sufferer of kidney complaint and was unable to control her kidney secretions. I tried everything that I thought might help her, but no good results were received until Doan's Kidney Pills were procured at Curtis' Drug Store. As soon as this remedy was taken, the child began to get better and now she has no symtom of kidney complaint. AGRI. COLLEGE HOLDS INSTITUTE

The state college of agriculture at St. Anthony Park, St. Paul, will conduct a two days institute for the farmers of Pennington, Red Lake and Marshall counties at the gymnasium of the Lincoln high school in Thief River Falls on Thursday and Friday, March 23 and 24, beginning at ten o'clock the first day. Five specialists are coming and they will bring working models of farm conveniences and charts and photographs of farm operations. Farmers' Institute Annual No. 23 will be distributed free to all at the morning sessions. This book alone is of great value to every tiller of the soil. The institute is absolutely free to every man, woman and child in the state. The meeting will take place at the room indicated, as it is the best in the city, being well lighted, heated and ventilated and has comfortable chairs and a good platform for speakers. It was arranged for these meetings and the farmers are requested to make themselves at home and feel that it is particularly their meeting place in the city.

In connection with the institute and at the same place, will occur the first corn contest ever held on northern Minnesota. The Upper Minnesota Corn Growers' Association, of which Henry Pope of Rocksbury town is president, will conduct this contest. It is for the purpose of encouraging the growing of corn for corn's sake and to afford framers an opportunity to buy reliable, acclimated seed corn. Prizes, consisting of cash, pieces of furniture, clocks, potato planter, and other articles of value and of service in a home will be offered for entries of corn. These premiums are donated by business houses of Thief River Falls and the names of the donors will appear on the prizes. All corn to be entered must be brought to the meeting place the first day, and that from a distance must be sent express prepaid to the Department of Agriculture, Thief River Falls High School. Competent judges will receive all entries and the awards will be made the second day. Owners of corn will have an opportunity to auction off their seed corn if they desire.

This is the first attempt in northern Minnesota to give corn the attention it deserves and farmers are invited to boost the proposition. Corn is fast becoming a native of this section and the farmers are bidding this new guest a warm welcome. Let all take hold of the matter and make corn the side partner of the dairy business in this and the neighboring counties. Nothing is too good for Pennington and her sisters, so boost for the meeting of next week by talking the matter over with friends and also by attending the full two days.

Prizes 1, 2 and 3.

Class 1—Best single ear corn any variety 1, 2 and 3.

Class 4—Best ten ears flint corn prizes 1, 2 and 3.

AT THE STATE LEGISLATURE

The Legislature of 1911.

For the sake of a little comparison I want to divide sixteen house members into two groups. The first will be composed of the eight leading lieutenants of Speaker Dunn. Their records in the present session would also justify the characterization of them as leading reactionaries. The second group will be selected from among the strongest and best equipped progressives. Here are the two lists:

Now take the five crucial committees in the house organization, Rules, Appropriations, Reapportionment, General Legislations and Taxes, and consider them in relation to the sixteen named above.

The Committee on Rules, the most important of all committees, has five members and out of that number four are from the eight leading reactionaries in the first group. The other four committees have:

Appropriations, 6 out of those 8 reactionaries.

Reapportionment, 6 out of those 8 reactionaries.

General Legislation, 7 out of those reactionaries.

Taxes, 7 out of those 8 reactionaries.

Not a single one of the eight insurgents in the second group is found on any one of those five most important committees.

This comparison proves just one thing—that the machinery of legislation in the lower body is in the hands of politicians, unprogressives and representatives of special interests. It admits of no other conclusion; And that interpretation of the situation would only be strengthened if I were to include a larger list of "regulars" and more committees. A select few of the reactionaries—about fifteen in number—were placed on so many committees that they cannot attend half the meetings that are scheduled. On the other hand, one can go into the House Chamber almost any time, when the committees are in session, and find practically all of the leading progressives idle so far as committee room work is concerned. They were assigned to few committees and those comparatively unimportant.

Speaker Dunn over-did "the packing of committees." His organization of the House has proven so obviously unjust and the reports from these stacked committees so crude and unfair that "the system" is crumbling of inherent rottenness. Not a week passes in which the House does not rebuke the organization [illegible] overturning some Cannonistic ac[illegible] of a standing committee. I [illegible] give one or two examples.

* * * * * * * *

The Committee o[illegible] Elections is typical. That com[illegible] mittee headed by L. D. Brown has [illegible] had in its custody some of the [illegible] ost vital measures of the session. [illegible] It has delayed action to the [illegible] point of violating the rules of the [illegible] House on every one. Very ear[illegible] in the session Dr. W. T. Stone, introduced a corrupt act, drafted on the plan of the Oregon law. He tried in vain to get reported from the elections committee, which held and delayed action for two months contrary to the rules. Finally, on the only day of the session when Dr. Stone has been absent Mr. Brown reported his measure, which is not outranked in importance by more than two, and recommended it for indefinite postponement". That was too raw for even a House that is not proving any too progressive and the elections committee was turned down by a vote of 70 to 39, and the Stone bill placed upon general orders.

It is reported that when the author of this bill pressed the elections committee for an explanation of its action, a leading member confessed that the measure had merely been delayed and never considered properly. "Why did'nt you read it?" was asked, "It was too damned long," was the answer. Such language and such incidents may seem out of place here but the real conditions should be understood by every citizen of the state. When indifference, indolence and ignorance are coupled with a natural tendency to delay and destroy everything progressive it is not to be wondered at that the people get the worst of almost every legislative situation.

* * * * * * * *

The temperance committee has been turned twice recently on important matters. The chairman of that committee, F. L. Palmer, is a progressive, but a majority of the other fourteen members are of the kind that need to be rebuked. This committee made a report "indefinitely postponing the state—wide prohibition bill. The House turned down that report and placed the bill on general orders by a vote of 60 to 53. The same committee "killed" the J. N. Johnson bill to extend local option to cities of the fourth class; but the House revived the measure and it is also on general orders.

* * * * * * * *

Here is some of the same thing, only more unprogressive, unfair and inexcusable. The committee on taxes is the most vital of all to the corporations, especially the steel trust. When Speaker Dunn made up that committee it was necessary almost to put on side boards to hold the enemies of a tonnage tax with which it was packed. This is not hearsay nor conjecture. Their report on the tonnage tax bill showed only a single friend of the measure in that committee—Hoffman or Rochester. The committee was loaded for the steel trust—sixteen to one. That was the ratio by which they rejected this measure involving a great tax principle and about a million more each year in taxes to the state. The issue would certainly seem of sufficient importance to justify its consideration by the House, yet this committe obviously packed for that purpose, reported it for "indefinite postponement," with only one dissenting vote from its seventeen members.

The committee on taxes is composed of the following members:

Chairman, R. C. Dunn, C. E. Hoffman, Saggau, McKenzie, Wescott, Orr, Washburn, Nash, L. D. Brown, Rice, Sponer, Rines, Congdon, Mattson, Fowler, Virtue.

On March 8th they reported H. F. No. 404, the Frankson—J. N. Johnson—Moriarity tonnage tax bill. The majority report killed it. A minority report signed alone by Henry A. Hoffman, recommended that the measure be made a special order for March 16th. The House—70 to 41—rebuked that packed committee for its manifest unfairness in attempting to dispose of a bill of so much moment and general interest in that Cannonistic way and adopted Mr. Hoffman's minority report. Here is the vote:

* * * * * * * *

This vote may or may not mean that the House will pass a bill imposing a tonnage tax on the iron properties of the steel trust. A few who are honestly opposed to the tonnage tax principle and will later oppose the measure voted to repudiate and rebuke the committee. It is even intimated that some voted to advance the bill in order that the steel trust might be frightened by the show if strength into "seeing" them. At any rate the result indicates that the bill has a chance of passage, which it would not have had if the work of arranging for its funeral in the tax committee had not been so badly overdone as to arouse general disgust and prejudice against the methods of the administration. Think of the situation of the total number of forty-one members who voted to

CULVERT CO. MAKES GOOD

Make And Deliver Large Order To Judicial Ditch No. 11 On 30 Days Notice

Assembled at Grygla, Minnesota, some forty miles northeast of Thief River Falls is a stack of 140 galvanized steel culverts of sizes varying from 12 inches to 72 inches in diameter (large enough for a tall man to stand erect in). These were all manufactured by the Northern Culvert Co., of this place in the short space of time of 30 days. As fast as they were being turned out Jenson & Sons loaded them on heavy bobs and hauled them across the snow-clad country to Grygla. When this late heavy thaw set in all were safely delivered at their destination. These culverts are all to go into the 500 mile ditch system of Judicial Ditch number 11 to make crossings and bridges on the same. A similar order, placed with another manufacturer has failed to put a single culvert at the disposal of the ditches at Grygla; and from now on it will be up hill work to haul heavy culverts across the intervening country from Thief River Falls which is the natural shipping point. This other firm, whose identity has not been divulged, only have their first carload shipment ready to make.

Thief River Falls is directly interested in seeing this country east of here with its vast possibilities developed as fast as may be and much credit is due Mr. Stawell for the dispatch with which he filled his order. The ditches now have at least 140 good culverts that they can without delay proceed to place and this it is thought will relieve the greatest strain for the season, as there would hardly be need of all this year. Engineer Hoag who has the work in charge says one man will be stationed at Grygla to have charge of the graphite or aluminum paint to give to have all the culverts painted with graphite or aluminum paint to give them greater resistance against corrosion. Painted culverts have been taken up after being in the ground for six years and it has been found that the paint was still good. Galvanized steel culverts in use for 16 years have been taken up and found fairly sound. How long they will last nobody can say, especially if properly painted. No culverts of this kind have yet been in use for 20 years. But even at that they are much better than the old wooden culverts and small bridges.

The work on Judicial Ditch No. 11 will be pushed forward with all possible vigor this season. Engineer Hoag is already on the grounds and is known to spare no efforts [illegible] When there.

UP TO THE DEMOCRATS

Possibilities In Sight For the Democrats In the Summer Session. Aldrich Still on Hand.

Washington, D. C., March 15, 1911. I have yet to find a Democrat or Republican who wanted an extra session of Congress. If the President wanted to make himself unpopular with members of Congress, he could not have adopted a better or more certain course. In the first place representatives and senators do not relish a summer in Washington. It is hot,-unbearably hot at times, and they would much prefer to be further north. Undoubtedly the President did not consult the wishes of congressman this time. Taft has been accused of leaning too much on the advice and suggestions, of his friends within the party. Here at least is a striking instance when he failed to follow precedent. He evidently did not follow his party associates or even the urgent request of the business interests, who did not want an extra session. Whether we agree with him or not as to the wisdom of calling this special session, the country will at least give him credit for acting in this instance independently and upon his own initiative. The President surprised the old leaders when he really made good his threat and called the special session. They thought he would back down.

The President is injecting considerable life and ginger into the channels of his administration of late. Does Taft contemplate a right-about-face policy from now on, cut loose from party leaders and steer his own course? The spicy letters which the President wrote to Secretary Ballinger, just before his resignation, were the "Hottest" stuff emanating thus far from the hitherto quiet and calm of the Executive Mansion. The President was mad through and through and he did not hesitate in stating that Ballinger had been the object of one of the most unscrupulous conspricies for the defamation of character that history can show. The country at large will take exception to this view of the President.

At any rate Ballinger, who has been a liability to the administration has resigned and succeeded by Mr. W. L. Fisher, a friend of Pinchot and a friend of conservation. Thus the Pinchot and his following have secured a great victory. The appointment of Mr. Fisher to the secretaryship of the Interior is a concession to the public demand to be represented by servants in whose hands the public interests are safe.

To return to the subject of an extra session, the opinion prevails that it will not last through the summer, although at first it was rumored that it would go far into the fall. It is the general plan now so far as the House is concerned, to organize only the necessary committees and to let the rest go over until the regular session next December. Under this arrangement the committee on Ways and Means, and one or two others will complete the committee organization for the special session. It is the purpose of the Democratis House leaders to go slowly and not do anything that will tend to distrub business conditions. The Democrats are playing for the Presidency in 1912 and it would be a big mistake, in their opinion, to start out the special session with a radical program which would lessen their chances with the people.

The Democrats propose no general tariff revision at this time. First, they will present bill enacting the provisions of the Canadian agreement, to this to be added amendments to the wool schedule. In addition it is proposed that this measure shall carry provisions revising the rate of the cotton schedule downward. Then there may be a bill revising other schedules affecting the necessaries of life. The Democrats take kindly to the suggestion that the House pass at this time a resolution proposing an amendment to the constitution, whereby senators may be elected by direct vote of the people, thus forcing this issue upon the Senate for action. Such a measure, it is recalled, failed by a narrow margin at the session just closed.

The reactionary element in the Democratic party has been making strenuous efforts to control some of the big committee assignments, and with them the chairmanships. This was noticeable in the fight for the chairmanship of the important committee on appropriations. The Tammanyites who were in alliance with Cannon while the Republicans controlled the House wanted Fitzgerald of New York to head this committee. Violent objection to Fitzgerald's appointment came from the progressive element within the party. In the Senate here is the same disposition to draw ever more sharply the line of cleavage between progressive and reactionary Democrats, Bailey leading the later faction and Owen the progressives. There is even talk of an alliance between the progressive Republicans and Democrats of the Senate. This is nothing more or less than a coalition of Republican progressives and anti-Bailey Democrats for the purpose of controlling the Senate organization and remarking the Senate committees. Under this program either Cummins or LaFollette would be made chairman of the Finance committee. Mr. Aldrich of Rhode Island whose term as senator expired March 4, and who has been chairman of this important committee which in the Senate has charge of tariff legislaion, has just returned to Washington and it is understood is watching the situation very closely. He is still strong with the regular Republicans. It is stated that the object of his visit to Washington at this time is to head off just such a coalition as has been suggested and to keep the Senate Republican organization in the hands of the "Old Guard." The extra session, even though short, promises some interesting developments.

McGINN BECOMES SOLE OWNER.

Tuesday morning a business transaction of more than usual interest took place when Charles C. Jackson transferred his business interests in both the Jackson and McGinn Hardware Store and building occupied by same to his former pardner, Robert McGinn. Mr. McGinn will assume all debts to or for the firm.

Mr. Jackson has conducted his hardware store here for almost seventeen years and has ever been one of our most energetic and "boosting" citizens. For the present Mr. Jackson says he will rest for a change and see how he likes it as a steady employment. In the course of the next few weeks he will probably take a trip West and down the Coast.

SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA MEETS WITH APPLAUSE AT CHICAGO.

When the Minneapolis Symphony orchestra at its concert here in Orchestra hall last evening, came to the end of the great Salvie march which forms the third movement of Tschaikowsky's Sixth symphony, the enthusiasm of Chicago music lovers knew no bounds. Round after round of vehement applause delayed appreciably the progress of the symphony and repeated acknowledgments by Mr. Oberhoffer could not stop the demonstrations. Only after the conductor had signalled to his men to rise and bow would the big audience be satisfied and settel back in its seats to hear the remainder of the first orchestral concert ever given in this city by a northwestern symphony orchestra.

And this incident tells as much as columns could of the long anticipated concert in Orchestra hall by the Minneapolis Symphony orchestra. Of course the Minneapolis supporters of the orchestra, a number of whom attended last night's concert, know it would be a big success, but a keen pleasure to have that loyal knowledge so gloriously confirmed—if knowledge can be confirmed.

The program, consisting of Beethoven, Tschaikowsky and Wagner was an exacting one and the men were closing a series of four concerts, but they rose nobly to the occasion and more than justified the confidence their city has placed in them by giving in the noble temple raised thru the efforts of Theodore Thomas, beloved pioneer of orchestral music in America, a performance for which he himself gladly would have stood sponsor.

The large audiance, I am told, was representative of the musical knowledge and culture of the western metropolis, and surely Minneapolis can ask no more for its orchestra than the cordial enthusiasm of such an audience as shown last evening.

$20,000 LOSS IN ONE YEAR

One Family Has Lost $20,000 How Did They Manage To Lose It

We are that family, brother Farmer and brother Business man. How did we lose it? I'll tell you.

For a long time I have been wondering how much we Pennington County people were contributing towards building up Chicago in general and Sears Roebuck, Montgomery Ward, John M. Smith and others in particular. Then along comes the happy news that Sears Roebuck and Co., have increased their capital $10,000,000 and declared a dividend of 331-3 per cent for 1910. So I set to work investigating to find out how much we sent to Chicago to help pay that dividend. I found $15000 and its safe to say that at least $5000 more was sent in registered mail and in other ways that I could not trace. $20,000 that we will never see again $20,000 in good money that ought to be circulating around in this community doing good wherever it went. Men, it's awful. Its as wrong as the old theory of blood letting that our forefathers believed in.

And yet we are not as bad as many other communities. The mail order houses are killing hundreds of towns. The reason we are better off than others is because our farmers are, as a rule, intelligent, loyal men who think clearly and broadly. No, brother Farmer, you are not the worst offender. Some of us towns people have done our share in swelling the profits of the New York, Chicago and Minneapolis merchants.

Why do we do it? Why do we ship out the money that belongs here, that should develop this city and its farming territory? Do it because we don't know better. Oh, piffle! Its because we lack team work. We must pull together; work together, like ants carrying to the same hill. If we don't we will be in the fix the body was in when all its different members went on a strike.

Let's co-operate. When you think Sears Roebuck and Co. can sell you goods cheaper than your home merchant, make out a bill of what you want with Sears Roebuck prices, take it to your home merchant, and let him figure on it. That's fair and square. And you, Mr. Merchant, advertise and do it right. Don't consider advertising a duty; consider it a privilege. The Mail Order Houses know how to advertise; follow their example. Advertising is business news; give the people the latest news from your store. Don't talk generations, get down to facts and figures.

As for you, ladies, when you "Can't find a thing fit to put on" in the home stores, don't rush to Minneapolis right off. Let your merchant know your tastes and your wants Let him send for it, whatever it may be. Then, by and by, your merchant will know exactly what to get and what not to get each spring and fall, when the salesmen come.

Visionary? Not at all. Try it this year and watch results.

BAGNE STARTS MEAT MARKET AT MAHNOMEN.

K. Bagne, of Thief River Falls, has purchased the meat market formerly owned by Tanglen Bros., and has taken posession. Mr. Bagne will move his family from Thief River Falls immediately. In making the trade Tanglen Bros., took a mill at Verndale and it is understood that they will go there immediately to take posession of it. They have secured a good water power mill and will undoubtedly make a success of the venture there. Mr. Bagne has been in the meat business at Thief River for some time and thoroughly understands the business. He has ordered a new stock from the St. Paul packing houses, which arrived this morning, so that he is now prepared to meet the trade.—Mahnomen Pioneer.

AGRI. COLLEGE HOLDS INSTITUTE

The state college of agriculture at St. Anthony Park, St. Paul, will conduct a two days institute for the farmers of Pennington, Red Lake and Marshall counties at the gymnasium of the Lincoln high school in Thief River Falls on Thursday and Friday, March 23 and 24, beginning at ten o'clock the first day. Five specialists are coming and they will bring working models of farm conveniences and charts and photographs of farm operations. Farmers' Institute Annual No. 23 will be distributed free to all at the morning sessions. This book alone is of great value to every tiller of the soil. The institute is absoluely free to every man, woman and child in the state. The meeting will take place at the room indicated, as it is the best in the city, being well lighted, heated and ventilated and has comfortable chairs and a good platform for speakers. It was arranged for these meetings and the farmers are requested to make themselves at home and feel that it is particularly their meeting place in the city.

In connection with the institute and at the same place, will occur the first corn contest ever held on northern Minnesota. The Upper Minnesota Corn Growers' Association, of which Henry Pope of Rocksbury town is president, will conduct this contest. It is for the purpose of encouraging the growing of corn for corn's sake and to afford framers an opportunity to buy reliable, acclimated seed corn. Prizes, consisting of cash, pieces of furniture, clocks, potato planter, and other articles of value and of service in a home will be offered for entries of corn. These premiums are donated by business houses of Thief River Falls and the names of the donors will appear on the prizes. All corn to be entered must be brought to the meeting place the first day, and that from a distance must be sent express prepaid to the Department of Agriculture, Thief River Falls High School. Competent judges will receive all entries and the awards will be made the second day. Owners of corn will have an opportunity to auction off their seed corn if they desire.

This is the first attempt in northern Minnesota to give corn the attention it deserves and farmers are invited to boost the proposition. Corn is fast becoming a native of this section and the farmers are bidding this new guest a warm welcome. Let all take hold of the matter and make corn the side partner of the dairy business in this and the neighboring counties. Nothing is too good for Pennington and her sisters, so boost for the meeting of next week by talking the matter over with friends and also by attending the full two days.

Prizes 1, 2 and 3.

Class 1—Best single ear corn any variety 1, 2 and 3.

Class 3—Best ten ears white corn prizes 1, 2 and 3.

Class 4—Best ten ears flint corn prizes 1, 2 and 3.

AT THE STATE LEGISLATURE

The Legislature of 1911.

For the sake of a little comparison I want to divide sixteen house members into two groups. The first will be composed of the eight leading lieutenants of Speaker Dunn. Their records in the present session would also justify the characterization of them as leading reactionaries. The second group will be selected from among the strongest and best equipped progressives. Here are the two lists:

REACTIONARIES —Wescott, McKenzie, Lennon, C. E. Stone, Pfaender, R. C. Dunn, Spooner and Congdon.

• • • • • • •

Now take the five crucial committees in the house organization, Rules, Appropriations, Reapportionment, General Legislations and Taxes, and consider them in relation to the sixteen named above.

The Committee on Rules, the most important of all committees, has five members and out of that number four are from the eight leading reactionaries in the first group. The other four committees have:

Appropriations, 6 out of those 8 reactionaries.
Reapportionment, 6 out of those 8 reactionaries.
General Legislation, 7 out of those reactionaries.
Taxes, 7 out of those 8 reactionaries.

Not a single one of the eight insurgents in the second group is found on any one of those five most important committees.

This comparison proves just one thing—that the machinery of legislation in the lower body is in the hands of politicians, unprogressives and representatives of special interests. It admits of no other conclusion. And that interpretation of the situation would only be strengthened if I were to include a larger list of "regulars" and more committees. A select few of the reactionaries—about fifteen in number—were placed on so many committees that they cannot attend half the meetings that are scheduled. On the other hand, one can go into the House Chamber almost any time, when the committees are in session, and find practically all of the leading progressives idle so far as committee room work is concerned. They were assigned to few committees and those comparatively unimportant.

Speaker Dunn over-did "the packing of committees." His organization of the House has proven so obviously unjust and the reports from these stacked committees so crude and unfair that "the system" is crumbling of inherent rottenness. Not a week passes in which the House does not rebuke the organization [illegible] overturning some Cannonistic [illegible] of a standing committee. I [illegible] give one or two examples.

• • • • • • •

The Committee o[illegible] Elections is typical. That com[illegible]mittee headed by L. D. Brown has [illegible] had in its custody some of the [illegible] most vital measures of the session. [illegible] It has delayed action to the [illegible] point of violating the rules of the [illegible] House on every one. Very [illegible] in the session Dr. W. T. Stone, introduced a corrupt act, drafted on the plan of the Oregon law. He tried in vain to get reported from the elections committee, which held and delayed action for two months contrary to the rules. Finally, on the only day of the session when Dr. Stone has been absent Mr. Brown reported his measure, which is not outranked in importance by more than two, and recommended it for indefinite postponement". That was too raw for even a House that is not proving any too progressive and the elections committee was turned down by a vote of 70 to 39, and the Stone bill placed upon general orders.

It is reported that when the author of this bill pressed the elections committee for an explanation of its action, a leading member confessed that the measure had merely been delayed and never considered properly. "Why did'nt you read it?" was asked. "It was too damned long," was the answer. Such language and such incidents may seem out of place here but the real conditions should be understood by every citizen of the state. When indifference, indolence and ignorance are coupled with a natural tendency to delay and destroy everything progressive it is not to be wondered at that the people get the worst of almost every legislative situation.

• • • • • • • •

The temperance committee has been turned twice recently on important matters. The chairman of that committee, F. L. Palmer, is a progressive, but a majority of the other fourteen members are of the kind that need to be rebuked. This committee made a report "indefinitely postponing the state—wide prohibition bill. The House turned down that report and placed the bill on general orders by a vote of 60 to 53. The same committee "killed" the J. N. Johnson bill to extend local option to cities of the fourth class; but the House revived the measure and it is also on general orders.

• • • • • • •

Here is some of the same thing, only more unprogressive, unfair and inexcusable. The committee on taxes is the most vital of all to the corporations, especially the steel trust. When Speaker Dunn made up that committee it was necessary almost to put on side boards to hold the enemies of a tonnage tax with which it was packed. This is not hearsay nor conjecture. Their report on the tonnage tax bill showed only a single friend of the measure in that committee—Hoffman or Rochester. The committee was loaded for the steel trust—sixteen to one. That was the ratio by which they rejected this measure involving a great tax principle and about a million more each year in taxes to the state. The issue would certainly seem of sufficient importance to justify its consideration by the House, yet this committe obviously packed for that purpose, reported it for "indefinite postponement," with only one dissenting vote from its seventeen members.

The committee on taxes is composed of the following members:

Chairman, R. C. Dunn, C. E. Hoffman, Saggau, McKenzie, Wescott, Orr, Washburn, Nash, L. D. Brown, Rice, Sponer, Rines, Congdon, Mattson, Fowler, Virtue.

On March 8th they reported H. F. No. 404, the Frankson—J. N. Johnson—Moriarity tonnage tax bill. The majority report killed it. A minority report signed alone by Henry A. Hoffman, recommended that the measure be made a special order for March 16th. The House—70 to 41—rebuked that packed committee for its manifest unfairness in attempting to dispose [illegible] of a bill of so much moment and general interest in that Cannonistic [illegible] way and adopted Mr. Hoffman's minority report. Here is the [illegible] vote:

• • • • • • • •

This vote may or may not mean that the House will pass a bill imposing a tonnage tax on the iron properties of the steel trust. A few who are honestly opposed to the tonnage tax principle and will later oppose the measure voted to repudiate and rebuke the committee. It is even intimated that some voted to advance the bill in order that the steel trust might be frightened by the show if strength into "seeing" them. At any rate the result indicates that the bill has a chance of passage, which it would not have had if the work of arranging for its funeral in the tax committee had not been so badly overdone as to arouse general disgust and prejudice against the methods of the administration. Think of the situation of the total number of forty-one members who voted to

CULVERT CO. MAKES GOOD

Make And Deliver Large Order To Judicial Ditch No. 11 On 30 Days Notice

Assembled at Grygla, Minnesota, some forty miles northeast of Thief River Falls is a stack of 140 galvanized steel culverts of sizes varying from 12 inches to 72 inches in diameter (large enough for a tall man to stand erect in). These were all manufactured by the Northern Culvert Co., of this place in the short space of time of 30 days. As fast as they were being turned out Jenson & Sons loaded them on heavy bobs and hauled them across the snow-clad country to Grygla. When this late heavy thaw set in all were safely delivered at their destination. These culverts are all to go into the 500 mile ditch system of Judicial Ditch number 11 to make crossings and bridges on the same. A similar order, placed with another manufacturer has failed to put a single culvert at the disposal of the ditches at Grygla; and from now on it will be up hill work to haul heavy culverts across the intervening country from Thief River Falls which is the natural shipping point. This other firm, whose identity has not been divulged, only have their first carload shipment ready to make.

Thief River Falls is directly interested in seeing this country east of here with its vast possibilities developed as fast as may be and much credit is due Mr. Stowell for the dispatch with which he filled his order. The ditches now have at least 140 good culverts that they can without delay proceed to use and this it is thought will relieve the greatest strain for the season, as there would hardly be need of all this year. Engineer Hoag who has the work in charge says one man will be stationed at Grygla to have charge of the graphite or aluminum paint to give to have all the culverts painted with graphite or aluninum paint to give them greater resistance against corrosion. Painted culverts have been taken up after being in the ground for six years and it has been found that the paint was still good. Galvanized steel culverts in use for 16 years have been taken up and found fairly sound. How long they will last nobody can say, especially if properly painted. No culverts of this kind have yet been in use for 20 years. But even at that they are much better than the old wooden culverts and small bridges.

The work on Judicial Ditch No. 11 will be pushed forward with all possible vigor this season. Engineer Hoag is already on the grounds and is known to spare no efforts when there.

To return to the subject of an extra session, the opinion prevails that it will not last through the summer, although at first it was rumored that it would go far into the fall. It is the general plan now so far as the House is concerned, to organize only the necessary committees and to let the rest go over until the regular session next December. The Democrats propose no general tariff revision at this time. First, they will present bill enacting the provisions of the Canadian agreement, to this to be added amendments to the wool schedule. In addition it is proposed that this measure shall carry provisions revising the rate of the cotton schedule downward. Then there may be a bill revising other schedules affecting the necessaries of life. The Democrats take kindly to the seggestion that the House pass at this time a resolution proposing an amendment to the constitution, whereby senators may be elected by direct vote of the people, thus forcing this issue upon the Senate for action. Such a measure, it is recalled, failed by a narrow margin at the session just closed.

The reactionary element in the Democratic party has been making strenuous efforts to control some of the big committee assignments, and with them the chairmanships. This was noticeable in the fight for the chairmanship of the important committee on appropriations. The Tammanyites who were in alliance with Cannon while the Republicans controlled the House wanted Fitzgerald of New York to head this committee. Violent objection to Fitzgerald's appointment came from the progressive element within the party. In the Senate here is the same disposition to draw ever more sharply the line of cleavage between progressive and reactionary Democrats, Bailey leading the later faction and Owen the progressives. There is even talk of an alliance between the progressive Republicans and Democrats of the Senate. This is nothing more or less than a coalition of Republican progressives and anti-Bailey Democrats for the purpose of controlling the Senate organization and remarking the Senate committees. Under this program either Cummins or LaFollette would be made chairman of the Finance committee. Mr. Aldrich of Rhode Island whose term as senator expired March 4, and who has been chairman of this important committee which in the Senate has charge of tariff legislaion, has just returned to Washington and it is understood is watching the situation very closely. He is still strong with the regular Republicans. It is stated that the object of his visit to Washington at this time is to head off just such a coalition as has been suggested and to keep the Senate Republican organization in the hands of the "Old Guard." The extra session, even though short, promises some interesting developments.

McGINN BECOMES SOLE OWNER.

Tuesday morning a business transaction of more than usual interest took place when Charles C. Jackson transferred his business interests in both the Jackson and McGinn Hardware Store and building occupied by same to his former pardner, Robert McGinn. Mr. McGinn will assume all debts to or for the firm.

Mr. Jackson has conducted his hardware store here for almost seventeen years and has ever been one of our most energetic and "boosting" citizens. For the present Mr. Jackson says he will rest for a change and see how he likes it as a steady employment. In the course of the next few weeks he will probably take a trip West and down the Coast.

SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA MEETS WITH APPLAUSE AT CHICAGO.

When the Minneapolis Symphony orchestra at its concert here in Orchestra hall last evening, came to the end of the great Salvic march which forms the third movement of Tschaikowsky's Sixth symphony, the enthusiasm of Chicago music lovers knew no bounds. Round after round of vehement applause delayed appreciably the progress of the symphony and repeated acknowledgments by Mr. Oberhoffer could not stop the demonstrations. Only after the conductor had signalled to his men to rise and bow would the big audience be satisfied and settel back in its seats to hear the remainder of the first orchestral concert ever given in this city by a northwestern symphony orchestra.

And this incident tells as much as columns could of the long anticipated concert in Orchestra hall by the Minneapolis Symphony orchestra. Of course the Minneapolis supporters of the orchestra, a number of whom attended last night's concert, know it would be a big success, but a keen pleasure to have that loyal knowledge so gloriously confirmed—if knowledge can be confirmed.

The program, consisting of Beethoven, Tschaikowsky and Wagner was an exacting one and the men were closing a series of four concerts, but they rose nobly to the occasion and more than justified the confidence their city has placed in them by giving in the noble temple raised thru the efforts of Theodore Thomas, beloved pioneer of orchestral music in America, a performance for which he himself gladly would have stood sponsor.

The large audiance, I am told, was representative of the musical knowledge and culture of the western metropolis, and surely Minneapolis can ask no more for its orchestra than the cordial enthusiasm of such an audience as shown last evening.

$20,000 LOSS IN ONE YEAR

One Family Has Lost $20,000 How Did They Manage To Lose It

We are that family, brother Farmer and brother Business man. How did we lose it? I'll tell you.

For a long time I have been wondering how much we Pennington County people were contributing towards building up Chicago in general and Sears Roebuck, Montgomery Ward, John M. Smith and others in particular. Then along comes the happy news that Sears Roebuck and Co., have increased their capital $10,000,000 and declared a dividend of 331-3 per cent for 1910. So I set to work investigating to find out how much we sent to Chicago to help pay that dividend. I found $15000 and its safe to say that at least $5000 more was sent in registered mail and in other ways that I could not trace. $20,000 that we will never see again $20,000 in good money that ought to be circulating around in this community doing good wherever it went. Men, it's awful. Its as wrong as the old theory of blood letting that our forefathers believed in.

And yet we are not as bad as many other communities. The mail order houses are killing hundreds of towns. The reason we are better off than others is because our farmers are, as a rule, intelligent, loyal men who think clearly and broadly. No, brother Farmer, you are not the worst offender. Some of us towns people have done our share in swelling the profits of the New York, Chicago and Minneapolis merchants.

Why do we do it? Why do we ship out the money that belongs here, that should develop this city and its farming territory? Do it because we don't know better. Oh, piffle! Its because we lack team work. We must pull together: work together, like ants carrying to the same hill. If we don't we will be in the fix the body was in when all its different members went on a strike.

Let's co-operate. When you think Sears Roebuck and Co. can sell you goods cheaper than your home merchant, make out a bill of what you want with Sears Roebuck prices, take it to your home merchant, and let him figure on it. That's fair and square. And you, Mr. Merchant, advertise and do it right. Don't consider advertising a duty; consider it a privilege. The Mail Order Houses know how to advertise; follow their example. Advertising is business news; give the people the latest news from your store. Don't talk generations, get down to facts and figures.

As for you, ladies, when you "Can't find a thing fit to put on" in the home stores, don't rush to Minneapolis right off. Let your merchant know your tastes and your wants Let him send for it, whatever it may be. Then, by and by, your merchant will know exactly what to get and what not to get each spring and fall, when the salesmen come.

Visionary? Not at all. Try it this year and watch results.

MEXICAN WAR BUBBLE BUSTED

Attitude of United States Now Perfectly Clear.

WILL STOP FILIBUSTERING

American Soldiers Will Be Strung Along the Border to Preserve Neutrality—General Wood Postpones Departure for the "Front"—Naval Vessels Will Merely Coal at Mexican Ports.

Washington, March 14.—Uncle Sam has drawn in his horns and as a result there has been a swif dissipation of the Mexican war scare. General Leonard Wood, chief of staff, announced that he will not go to Texas "until May," which probably means that he will not go at all; the American cruisers which had been ordered to put into Mexican ports for "moral effect" have been rerouted to serve as exchange station ships off Panama; Secretary Dickinson, after reading the first reports from the frontier, announced that he saw no possibility of intervention; official denial was made of any intention to mobilize a second division of regulars, although this was contemplated for several days last week; the San Antonio concentration of troops has been ordered broken and the gossip about the department was that the war is over. An order also was sent to the border to seize all food supplies designed for the insurgents.

In New York the Mexican minister of finance, Senor Yves Jose Limantour, said significantly that had smuggling across the border been stopped months ago the revolution would have been put down, which is generally taken to mean that, now the border is protected, the revolution will last but a short time.

The disintegration of the San Antonio troops is the result of a plan of the war department to string a wall of men across the border and end filibustering while by martial law President Diaz and his forces exterminate the revolutionists.

The reason for the sudden change in the situation is not made clear in official statements. After reading the first reports which have come from the Mexican border to the war department Secretary Dickinson said he saw no necessity for intervention.

It appears the repealing of the constitutional guarantee by President Diaz is so drastic that it will quell the revolution, according to the messages sent the secretary. That the repeal is more drastic in purpose than its wording indicates is also the opinion of Ancona, the famous Mexican insurgent. Ancona told the reporters that it meant the shooting down of the 10,000 political prisoners now held by Diaz.

MEXICANS ARE GRATIFIED

New York, March 14.—The Mexican ambassador here and the Mexican minister of finance received assurance from Washington which convinced them that there is sincere co-operation between the administration of President Taft and that of President Diaz. The edge of apprehension was appreciably blunted by two important pieces of news.

First in importance was a long telegram to Ambassador de la Barra from the state department at Washington announcing that the United States warships assigned to patrol duty on the Pacific and Gulf coasts of Mexico had been ordered to call at Mexican ports only for coal and then to withdraw promptly.

The second development was the publication here of an interview with Jacob M. Dickinson, the secretary of

UPHELD BY THE HIGHEST COURT

Federal Tax on Corporations Declared Legal.

THE OPINION IS UNANIMOUS

Washington, March 14.—The corporation tax provisions of the Payne-Aldrich tariff act were sustained as constitutional by the supreme court of the United States. The court was unanimous in its decision. Thereby a source of income of approximately $25,000,000 annually was assured to the government.

Of all the objections to the tax raised by suits in all parts of the country none of them was found sufficient to nullify the law. The court did hold that the tax was not applicable to the real seatte "trust" of Boston, which was organized not under any statute but under the common law.

The law was held not applicable to the Minneapolis syndicate, a real estate concern, on the ground that it was not "doing business" within the meaning of the law.

The decision was announced by Justice Day.

Scope of Impost Defined.

Near the outset of the opinion, as it appears in printed form, is the statement that the tax "is imposed not upon franchises of the corporation, irrespective of their use in business, nor upon the property of the corporations, but upon the doings of corporate or insurance business and with respect to the carrying on thereof in a sum equivalent to 1 per centum of the entire net income over and above $5,000, received from all sources during this year; that is, when imposed in this manner it is a tax upon the doing of business with the advantages which inhere in the peculiarities of corporate or joint stock organization of the character described. As the latter organizations share many benefits of corporate organization, it may be described generally as a tax upon the doing of business in a corporate capacity.

The formality was entirely without ceremony and only the immediate principals to the change were present. Following the oath taking felicitations were exchanged between the new and the retiring secretary.

New York, March 14.—The first real disorder of the express strike came when a crowd of men made an attack on an express wagon manned by a driver and two helpers. The crowd, which had gathered in Park avenue, near Fifty-seventh street, threw stones and other missiles and the police had difficulty in dispersing the rioters. One arrest was made.

There was no move by drivers of other express companies to join the strike begun by the Adams Express company employes on Saturday. It was said that the Wells-Fargo men had decided not to go out in any event.

The Great Conservation Novel

By HAMLIN GARLAND

Copyright, 1910, by Hamlin Garland

Mrs. Redfield, quite as urban as the house, was a slim little woman of delicate habit, very far from the ordinary conception of a rancher's wife. Her manner was politely considerate, but not heatedly cordial (the visitor was not precisely hers), and, though she warmed a little after looking into Virginia's face, she could not by any stretch of phrase be called cordial.

"Are you tired? Would you like to lie down before dinner?" she asked.

"Oh, no, indeed. Nothing ever tires me," Virginia responded, with a smile.

"You look like one in perfect health," continued her hostess in the envious tone of one who knew all too well what ill health meant. "Let me show you to your room."

The house was not precisely the palace the cowboy had reported it to be, but it was charmingly decorated, and the furnishings were tasteful. To the girl it was as if she had been transported with instant magic from the horrible little cow town back to the home of one of her dearest friends in Chester. She was at once exalted and humbly grateful.

"We dine at 7," Mrs. Redfield was saying, "so you can take a cup of tea without spoiling your dinner. Will you venture it?"

"If you please."

"Very well, come down soon and I'll have it ready. Mr. Redfield, I'm sure, will want some."

Virginia's heart was dancing with delight of this home as she came down the stairs a little later. As they talked Mrs. Redfield studied the girl with increasing interest and favor and soon got at her point of view. She even secured a little more of her story which matched fairly well with the account her husband had given. Her prejudices were swept away, and she treated her young guest as one well born and well educated woman treats another.

At last she said: "We dress for dinner, but any frock you have will do. We are not ironclad in our rules. There will be some neighbors in, but it isn't in any sense a 'party.'"

Lee Virginia went to her room borne high upon a new conception of the possibilities of the west. It was glorious to think that one could enjoy the refinement, the comfort, of the east at the same time that one dwelt within the inspiring shadow of the range. Her hands were a-tremble as she put on the bright muslin gown which was all she had for evening wear. She felt very much like the schoolgirl again, and after she had done her best to look nice she took a seat in the little rocker with intent to compose herself for her meeting with strangers. "I wish we were dining without visitors," she said as she heard a carriage drive up. A little later a galloping horse entered the yard and stopped at the door.

She heard voices in the hall and among them one with a very English accent, one that sounded precisely like those she had heard on the stage.

CHAPTER VII.

TWO ON THE VERANDA.

Enderby turned out to be the owner of the voice with the English accent which Lee Virginia had heard in the hall, but he was very nice, and a moment later Mrs. Redfield entered with Mrs. Enderby, a large lady with a smiling face. Then a voice she knew spoke from behind her: "I don't need a presentation. Miss Wetherford and I have already met."

She turned to meet Ross Cavanagh, the young ranger.

"How did you get here?" she asked in wonder.

"I rode across the hills. It's not far."

He, too, was in evening dress, and as she stared at him in surprise he laughingly protested. "Please don't scrutinize this coat too closely. It's the only one I've owned for ten years, and this is the only house in which I'd dare to wear it."

One of the guests was State Senator Bridges, a farmerlike elderly man wearing a badly fitting serge suit. He was markedly western. So was his wife, who looked rather uneasy and hot.

"I know I am," he replied heartily.

He was, as Redfield had said, highly susceptible, made so by his solitary life in the mountains, and to be seated close beside this maid of the valley stirred his blood to the danger point. It was only by an effort of the will that he kept in touch with the conversation.

"I hadn't the least thought of seeing you here," said Virginia. "How did you happen to come?"

"Redfield telephoned me at the mill, and I came at once. I haven't been here since May, and I just thought I'd take a half day off. Luckily my understudy was with me. I left him 'on the job.'"

He did not tell her that she was the principal reason for this sudden descent upon Elk Lodge, and no one but Redfield knew the killing ride he had taken in order to be in at the beginning of the dinner. The girl's face and voice, especially her voice, had been with him night and day as he went about his solitary duties. Her life problem had come to fill his mind to a disturbing degree, and he was eager to know more of her and of her struggle against the vice and vulgarity of the Forks.

"How is your mother?" he asked a few minutes later.

"Not at all well. Mr. Redfield is to take the doctor back with us tomorrow." The ecstasy died out of her face, and the flexible lips drooped with troubled musing. "I am afraid she suffers more than she will admit."

"She needs a rest and change. She should get away from her seat at that cash register and return to the open air. A touch of [illegible] life would help her. She [illegible]

"I know she does, but she won't let me relieve her, even for an hour. It isn't because she doesn't trust me; she says it's because she doesn't want me sitting there—so—publicly. She doesn't oppose my housekeeping any more"—

"You certainly have made the old hotel into a place of miraculous neatness."

She flushed with pleasure. "I have done something, but not as I'd like to do. I really think if mother wishes to sell she could do so now to much better advantage."

"I've no doubt of it. Really, I'm not being funny, Miss Wetherford, when I say you've done something heroic. It's no easy thing to go into a place like that and make it habitable. It shows immense courage and self reliance on your part. It's precisely the kind of work this whole country needs."

His praise, sincere and generous, repaid her for all she had gone through. It was a great pleasure to hear her small self praised for courage and self reliance by one whose daily work was heroic. All things conspired to make a conquest of her heart, for the ranger bore himself with grace and dealt with his silver deftly. His face, seen from the side, was older and sterner than she had thought it, but it was very attractive in line.

Redfield appealed to the ranger. "Ross, you're all sorts of a reactionary. What do you say to this? Senator Bridges is opposed to all federal interference with state forests and state game."

The forester's eyes lit up. "But are they state forests and state game? What makes them so? They are lands which the whole people purchased and which the whole people defended."

"Heah, heah!" cheered Enderby.

Bridges bristled with anger and went off into a long harangue on state rights and the dangers of centralization, to which Enderby replied: "Bosh! The whole trouble with your bally government is its lack of cohesion. If I had my way I'd wipe out the senate. You're such blooming asses over here. You don't know enough to keep a really big man in your presidential chair. This fussing about every four years is plain rot. Here's Roosevelt gets in the midst of a lot of the finest kind of reforms, you know, and directly you go and turn him out. Then if you get a bad man you've to wait four years till you can fetch him a whack. Why not arrange it so you can pitch your president out the minute he goes wrong? I say your old rag of a constitution is a ball and chain on your national leg. England is immeasurably better off so far as that goes."

Ross turned to Virginia, leaving the political discussion to go on over his head. "I was back in the old island a couple of years ago, and you've no idea how small it seemed to me. It surely is a 'right little, tight little island.' I couldn't help wondering whether the men in parliament were as important as they seemed to think they were and whether England is not really an empty shell of empire, a memory of what it once was. I couldn't settle down there some way.

TEN BODIES TAKEN FROM THE DEBRIS

Virginia, Minn., March 13.—Ten bodies crushed almost into an unrecognizable mass of flesh and bones have been recovered from the Norman open pit mine here, where a cavein occurred, burying about a score of miners.

The remainder of the bodies have not been reached, but the mine officials are bending every effort to expedite the work of rescue. A large force of men is working with all speed, but there is no reason to spppose that any of the men will be taken out alive.

To still more hasten the work additional "clams" have been sent for and these, capable of lifting many tons of ore, will, it is thought, bring to light the missing bodies before many hours elapse.

The ten bodies thus far recovered lie at the morgue, which has been besieged by wives, children and relatives of the dead men and the scenes of agony and distress are such as affect the stoutest heart.

According to the information the company has, more men escaped than was supposed. The company officials believe that not more than eighteen men lost their lives.

UPHELD BY THE HIGHEST COURT

Federal Tax on Corporations Declared Legal.

THE OPINION IS UNANIMOUS

Washington, March 14.—The corporation tax provisions of the Payne-Aldrich tariff act were sustained as constitutional by the supreme court of the United States. The court was unanimous in its decision. Thereby a source of income of approximately $35,000,000 annually was assured to the government.

Of all the objections to the tax raised by suits in all parts of the country none of them was found sufficient to nullify the law. The court did hold that the tax was not applicable to the real seatte "trust" of Boston, which was organized not under any statute but under the common law.

The law was held not applicable to the Minneapolis syndicate, a real estate concern, on the ground that it was not "doing business" within the meaning of the law.

The decision was announced by Justice Day.

Scope of Impost Defined.

Near the outset of the opinion, as it appears in printed form, is the statement that the tax "is imposed not upon franchises of the corporation, irrespective of their use in business, nor upon the property of the corporations, but upon the doings of corporate or insurance business and with respect to the carrying on thereof in a sum equivalent to 1 per centum of the entire net income over and above $5,000, received from all sources during this year; that is, when imposed in this manner it is a tax upon the doing of business with the advantages which inhere in the peculiarities of corporate or joint stock organization of the character described. As the latter organizations share many benefits of corporate organization, it may be described generally as a tax upon the doing of business in a corporate capacity.

BALLINGER OUT OF OFFICE

Walter L. Fisher, New Cabinet Officer, Assumes Duties.

Washington, March 1.—The responsibility of the secretaryship of the department of the interior was shifted when Walter L. Fisher of Chicago took the oath of office as head of that department, succeeding Judge Richard A. Ballinger, who retired.

The oath was administered in the private office of the secretary by W. B. Acker, a division chief in the department, acting in the capacity of notary public. The formality was entirely without ceremony and only the immediate principals to the change were present. Following the oath taking felicitations were exchanged between the new and the retiring secretary.

The new secretary spent the morning receiving bureau heads and division chiefs of the department.

RIOT IN THE EXPRESS STRIKE

New York Police Disperse Mob Attack on Wagon.

New York, March 14.—The first real disorder of the express strike came when a crowd of men made an attack on an express wagon manned by driver and two helpers. The crowd, which had gathered in Park avenue, near Fifty-seventh street, threw stones and other missiles and the police had difficulty in dispersing the rioters. One arrest was made.

There was no move by drivers of other express companies to join the strike begun by the Adams Express company employes on Saturday. It was said that the Wells-Fargo men had decided not to go out in any event.

The Great Conservation Novel

By HAMLIN GARLAND

Copyright, 1910, by Hamlin Garland

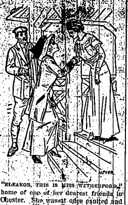
Mrs. Redfield, quite as urban as the house, was a slim little woman of delicate habit, very far from the ordinary conception of a rancher's wife. Her manner was politely considerate, but not heatedly cordial (the visitor was not precisely hers), and, though she warmed a little after looking into Virginia's face, she could not by any stretch of phrase be called cordial.

"Are you tired? Would you like to lie down before dinner?" she asked.

"Oh, no, indeed. Nothing ever tires me," Virginia responded, with a smile.

"You look like one in perfect health," continued her hostess in the envious tone of one who knew all too well what ill health meant. "Let me show you to your room."

The house was not precisely the palace the cowboy had reported it to be, but it was charmingly decorated, and the furnishings were tasteful. To the girl it was as if she had been transported with instant magic from [illegible]



"ELEANOR, THIS IS MISS WETHERFORD,"

home of one of her dearest friends in Chester. She was at once exalted and humbly grateful.

"We dine at 7," Mrs. Redfield was saying, "so you can take a cup of tea without spoiling your dinner. Will you venture it?"

"If you please."

"Very well, come down soon and I'll have it ready. Mr. Redfield, I'm sure, will want some."

Virginia's heart was dancing with delight of this home as she came down the stairs a little later. As they talked Mrs. Redfield studied the girl with increasing interest and favor and soon got at her point of view. She even secured a little more of her story which matched fairly well with the account her husband had given. Her prejudices were swept away, and she treated her young guest as one well born and well educated woman treats another.

At last she said: "We dress for dinner, but any frock you have will do. We are not ironclad in our rules. There will be some neighbors in, but it isn't in any sense a 'party.'"

Lee Virginia went to her room borne high upon a new conception of the possibilities of the west. It was glorious to think that one could enjoy the refinement, the comfort, of the east at the same time that one dwelt within the inspiring shadow of the range. Her hands were a-tremble as she put on the bright muslin gown which was all she had for evening wear. She felt very much like the schoolgirl again, and after she had done her best to look nice she took a seat in the little rocker with intent to compose herself for her meeting with strangers. "I wish we were dining without visitors," she said as she heard a carriage drive up. A little later a galloping horse entered the yard and stopped at the door.

She heard voices in the hall and among them one with a very English accent, one that sounded precisely like those she had heard on the stage.

CHAPTER VII.

TWO ON THE VERANDA.

Enderby turned out to be the owner of the voice with the English accent which Lee Virginia had heard in the hall, but he was very nice, and a moment later Mrs. Redfield entered with Mrs. Enderby, a large lady with a smiling face. Then a voice she knew spoke from behind her: "I don't need a presentation. Miss Wetherford and I have already met."

She turned to meet Ross Cavanagh, the young ranger.

"How did you get here?" she asked in wonder.

"I rode across the hills. It's not far."

He, too, was in evening dress, and as she stared at him in surprise he laughingly protested. "Please don't scrutinize this coat too closely. It's the only one I've owned for ten years, and this is the only house in which I'd dare to wear it."

One of the guests was State Senator Bridges, a farmerlike elderly man wearing a badly fitting serge suit. He was markedly western. So was his wife, who looked rather uneasy and hot.

"I know I am," he replied heartily.

He was, as Redfield had said, highly susceptible, made so by his solitary life in the mountains, and to be seated close beside this maid of the valley stirred his blood to the danger point. It was only by an effort of the will that he kept in touch with the conversation.

"I hadn't the least thought of seeing you here," said Virginia. "How did you happen to come?"

"Redfield telephoned me at the mill, and I came at once. I haven't been here since May, and I just thought I'd take a half day off. Luckily my understudy was with me. I left him 'on the job.'"

He did not tell her that she was the principal reason for this sudden descent upon Elk Lodge, and no one but Redfield knew the killing ride he had taken in order to be in at the beginning of the dinner. The girl's face and voice, especially her voice, had been with him night and day as he went about his solitary duties. Her life problem had come to fill his mind to a disturbing degree, and he was eager to know more of her and of her struggle against the vice and vulgarity of the Forks.

"How is your mother?" he asked a few minutes later.

"Not at all well. Mr. Redfield is to take the doctor back with us tomorrow." The ecstasy died out of her face, and the flexible lips drooped with troubled musing. "I am afraid she suffers more than she will admit."

The silver lining to the reciprocity cloud is the awakening of our American farmers to the need of more perfected production and greater diversification of their farming.—The Northwestern Agriculturist.

Japan seems to have learned well the lessons taught her by Uncle Sam. She now assumes a gentle protectorate over the entire Orient. That is as it should be both China and Russia needs someone to look after them.

With a Dove of Peace resting on one hand and a musket in the other how ludicious Uncle Sam must appear as he advances toward Mexico. Yet if that is the only way to maintain peace let us do it even tho other nations may laugh at our methods.

Adjutant General Fred B. Wood is quoted as saying that he is rather anxious to test the efficiency of the state militia and would "welcome a call to arms." Probably a proper spirit for a soldier still we advise him to attend a Carnegie Peace Institute or visit the Temple of Peace at our National Capitol.

According to Bartholomew of the Minneapolis Journal, President Taft is spending his vacation studying "Mules and How to Make them Pull". The President will no doubt find that the Democratic Donkey is good enough as a puller but he may find that she has other bad habits. For instance, she may run away with the Reciprocity Cart and up-set it in a Free Trade ditch and spoil the entire cargo according to his notion.

Just as we have the patrol limits for all time. if good judgment prevails, so is it within our ability and power to develop a public sentiment for a healthy control over saloons until such time as they may be abolished. Under a home rule license system, Minneapolis has it within her power to set the pace in saloon regulation, as she did in the establishment of patrol limits. There is no reason for the low-down character of much of our saloon system. It is inconsistent with common sense.-Minneapolis Journal.

Thus far even the great Minneapolis Journal has been educated by constant hammering of the anti-saloon element. And more is yet to come.

AN ELBERT HUBBARD STORY OF SANFORD DODGE.

Walter Whiteside was doing the wire grass country with his Shakespearean production. Requiring the services of a super he asked the manager of the opera house if he could furnish a capable amateur for the evening's bill. The manager was obliging. "Sure, we've got a guy around here that did the same part for Sanford Dodge two or three times."

Night came as it sometimes does, and Mr. Whiteside stood in the center of the stage waiting for the new recruit to come on. He repeated the cue several times. No response. Finally he rushed off.

"Why don't you come on. don't you hear the cue?

"You didn't give me the cue that Mr. Dodge gave me."

"What, did Mr. Dodge say?"

"He always said: 'You damn fool come on!'"—The Fra, June 1910.

deny to the whole House the right to consider the measure, sixteen were packed into the tax committee.

••••••••

The system has been in full swing on other issues concerning the corporations and politicians. On Thursday the Robinson resolution calling for an investigation into the campaign receipts and expenditures of the state central committees was chloroformed and interred before it had a chance to regain conciousness. The manner in which the administration forces rode rough shod over Robinson was a sight to make men and angels weep. First the Committee on General Legislation delayed consideration as long as it possibly could and then imposed the usual sentence—death by "indefinite postponement." Their report was opposed by the fighting insurgent father of the resolution. But shackled and muzzled he was led to the slaughter. Alex Nelson of Otter Tail County shut off all debate thru the cowardly devise of moving "the previous question", as soon as the matter was placed before the House. His position was sustained by a majority, which of course prevented Mr. Robinson or any other member from setting forth his reasons for asking the inquiry into special interest activity in state politics. Then there was a general justification of votes against the investigation on the ground that the House had not sufficient evidence to warrant such action. And they voted it down. Whereupon there was great rejoicing among the brewers and professional politicians. Selah.

••••••••

And again the system prevailed against the people in defeating an honest, effective initiative and referendum bill. That was also accomplished on Thursday last. The story of that fight is too long to be told here. It will be just as interesting and significant next week. I watched the brewers prepare for this, the biggest battle of the session. I noted every move made during the five-hour fight. I shall tell the story without fear or favor. Here is the final vote on the Campbell bill, which provided that laws could be initiated by the people on a percentage of ten, and referred to them thru an eight-percent petition. It was the measure backed by the progressives of the state:

NEW SOLUM.

The base-ball meeting, that the boys held last Sunday, was well attended. The first on the program was that our manager was stormed down with snow-balls and nearly suffocated and the next they played anty-l-over, and two base runners ran against each other, one of em got a blue eye, and the other got a pink eye

Well how did that Auction Sale turn out. I hope it went allright with that lame horse, and those High heeled Roosters. But we never heard that before that Texas was north-east of Viking. So lets all go to Texas and learn how to play bingo.

Word has reached us that out west they put the Snow plow on flat cars and drive in the snow drifts till they get so plump stuck they can't get in or outor up or down

INGALLS ITEM.

At the residence of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Erick Peterson March 11th at 7 p. m., occurred the marriage of Miss Esther Peterson and Mr. Osmund Thompson.

This is the third wedding at Mr. Peterson's in less than eight months the bride in each instance being one of his daughters.

Mr. and Mrs. Thompson received many useful and handsome presents, also a nice sum of money. There were about seventy-five guests and after the knot was tied, a bountiful supper was served after which dancing was indulged in until the wee small hours of the morning, music being furnished by W. S. Kezar's string band, and all went home much pleased with their entertainment.

NEW SOLUM ECHOES.

Miss Hilda Eide left for Thief River Falls last week where she will be staying for some time.

The reporter of the New Solum News made an announcement in the last issue of the Press regarding an Auction Sale to be held three miles North East of Viking, which we beg to say, is slightly off the track.

We are informed by both owner and helpers, that neither, know anything of the Auction, therefore, we are left to draw the conclusion that Mr. Reporter must have made the announcement solely on his own hook and without either owners consent or knowledge.

Now that's going some!!

We are all led to believe that some Lunatic escaped from Fergus Falls, hospital has put up an office somewhere between Newfolden and Strip, and that his cash must be running rather low, as he tries to sell another man's property before taking a flying trip to Texas.

But as we are always ready to help a good cause along, we will not detain him by not having any auction; but will do our level best to ship him out of the state before the last of March. We are sory to say, however, that the lame horse is down with a severe attack of heaves, so we are compelled to postpone the sale for two weeks from time set by that Fergus Falls man.

Mr. Anita mayor is busy fixing up for the coming shike poke season, and if he should by some chance happen to buy that harmless shot-gun we should advise everybody to keep out of range.

Herbert, the Strip checker shark, is going to quit business as a retail dealer and start traveling for the New Maine checker Co., selling checker-boards on a big scale.

The program and eye social given at Strip last Friday night was a great success, and all present jion in congratulating Miss Weeks on the splendid time she gave us.

We should be very thankful if the Fergus Falls man would accept some good advice which we are willing to give. We have heard that some kinds of fish are supposed to be good brain food. Now, if he would eat a whale before he sends in his next report we feel sure that his composition would be improved.

What was the matter with Pete as we did not see him last Friday evening? May be the rheumatism is troubling him in his old age.

Oh! yes!! That Fergus Falls man again, seems as tho we can never forget him. We are informed as the last movement that the auctioneer wishes us to tell him, he will do all that muscle can do in helping him into Fergus, and if we are not badly mistaken the trip would be very short if John could have a hand in the game.

Notice !!!

A reward of 10,000 kernels of snuff is offered for the capture of the Fergus Falls lunatic, spposed to have taken refuge in the vicinity of Strip.

GERMANTOWN.

The annual stockholders meeting of the Germantown Co-operative Co. was held last Wednesday, twenty-five members being present. A number of our Eastern patrons failed to appear on account of the roads breaking up. The report of the Secretary was listened to eagerly, as it gave the business done during last year and the standing of the company in every detail. A dividend of 8 per cent on stockholders capital; 2 per cent on share holders purchase and 1 per cent on none shareholders purchase was declared. This is very good as 2 per cent discount has been given on all cash purchases to regular customers. Manager Johnson has certainly shown that he is able to run a business like that. Stock was run down last spring. Some patrons did not like the cash business, but it has proven to be the only way to have cash all the time. Our manager saved $166.69 in discounts on purchases.

The following men were elected directors:

Town election was gotten over a good easier than was expected. Attendance was good; 34 votes were cast and the following officers elected: T. E. Havelous, Supvisor; O. A. Rambeck, Clerk; Martin Hovelous, Treaurer; John Ristau, Assessor

Everybody is busy hauling hay home now.

Carl Bellin passed the 55th mile stone last week and Mrs. John Ristau crossed the 40th, both were congratulated by neighbors and a good time spent.

HIS EFFORTS PRAISEWORTHY.

"Faust," the time-enduring master-piece of the imomrtal Goethe, is the offering at the Grand for the first half of the week. An audience that comfortably filled the house, witnessed the play last evening, and though many of those present doubtless had seen the piece performed by more noted artists, all seemed to appreciate the efforts of the present company. The work of Sanford Dodge and Miss Louise Marshall in the leading roles was particularly praiseworthy, both acquitting themselves in fine shape. While "Faust" and the drama seen here two weeks ago, the "Devil" have much in common as to plot, there is a wide difference in the moral tone and the lessons for good to be gained therefrom. In the first named, evil is shown up in such hideousness that none but the totally depraved could fail to avoid the soul danger depicted; on the contrary, in the "Devil", the way of the transgressor is roseate to the very end.—Salt Lake News.

AN ACTOR WITH MAGNETISM.

The Gladiator.

A play far above the ordinary, was "The Gladiator," as presented by Mr Sanford Dodge and an excellent company at the Coliseum last night The story is laid in Rome, over 2,000 years ago, when that city was in the very zenith of its power.

"The Gladiator" is of that same class of historical drama as "Ben Hur" and "Quo Vadis," and as fascinating as either. The production was splendid, the scenic details effective, and the acting of a high order.

Mr. Dodge, in the title role, gave a superb performance. Here is an actor possessing magnetism, a splendid voice and a striking physique. Miss Nickerson was a convincing heroine.—Raton (New Mexico) Daily Range.

Dolliver and the Dahlias.

The dahlia is a flower that is almost sacred to Scandinavians. When the late Senator Dolliver was speaking to a Swedish settlement from the rear end of a Pullman car a bunch of dahlias was handed to him, and he bowed his thanks, while the crowd roared its applause for the orator and for the bouquet.

"What kind of flowers are these?" inquired Senator Dolliver of Senator Clapp of Minnesota.

"American Beauties, I guess," replied Senator Clapp.

Dolliver knew better than that, so he heartily thanked the people for their attention, applause and splendid flowers.

When they met in Washington after the campaign Senator Dolliver said to the Minnesota man: "Clapp, you would have had me mobbed if I hadn't been prudent. If I had called those dahlias American Beauties those Swedes would have been for killing me."

"Yes," said Senator Clapp, "they are good people and generally do the right thing."—Minneapolis Journal.

Why He Wept.

A man who was walking through a train inadvertently left the door of one of the cars open. A big man sitting in a seat in the middle of the car yelled: "Shut the door, you fool! Were you raised in a barn?"

The man who had left the door open closed it and then, dropping into a seat, buried his face in his hands and began to weep. The big man looked somewhat uncomfortable and, rising, finally walked up to the weeper and tapped him on the shoulder.

"My friend," he said, "I didn't intend to hurt your feelings. I just wanted you to close the door."

The man who was weeping raised his head and grinned. "Old man," he said, "I'm not crying because you hurt my feelings, but because you asked me if I was raised in a barn. The sad fact is that I was raised in a barn, and every time I hear an ass bray it makes me homesick."—Louisville Times.

The Speedier Way.

He simply couldn't help it. He was born lazy.

As a rule, if not too sleepy, he could get through a shave in about thirty-five minutes. But today, after only fourteen hours' sleep, he appeared even more sluggish than ever. As he applied the lather to his customer's beard his brush lingered haltingly, as though loath to leave the stubby chin to which it was being applied.

His customer was a patient man and stood this for a considerable while. But at last his patience began to ooze, and he interrupted a forty winks' interval with a cough.

"S'ere, lad," he suggested. "Aa've an idea. Hold your hand, keep tha brush still, an' aa'll wag ma head for ye!"—London Answers.

Making Things Hum In Rome.

The Romans had three recognized methods of applauding—the bombus, the imbrices and the testae. The word bombus did not carry any allusion to explosives. On the contrary, this form of applause was the most decorous, inasmuch as it consisted merely of a humming or buzzing noise. Thus in a way the Romans were the first to [illegible] make things hum" in a public assembly. The bombus was not the chief feature the Romans had to offer in the way of applause. The imbrices meant a demonstration made with the hollow of the hands. The testae meant the striking together of the flat portions of the hands. From this we may conclude that the Romans clapped, but there is no certainty on this point.—New York Herald.

A Shabby Coat Collar.

Very often the collar of a coat begins to look shabby when the coat itself is in good order, and it is wonderful what a difference a thorough cleaning will make. First take a piece of clean cloth and dip it in spirits of turpentine and rub the collar thoroughly with it. Leave it for ten minutes, then rub it again with the turpentine and scrape it carefully to remove any loose dirt. Next sponge the collar with a little alcohol and keep wiping it until it is dry. Hang it up in an airy place for an hour or two and it will look as good as new.—Boston Herald.

The Moonrakers.

"In the English county of Wiltshire," said a customs official, "the natives are called 'moonrakers.' There's a Wiltshire story, over a century old, about some rustics who were found one night raking away in a pond at the reflection of the moon, which they took for a cheese.

"That's a very good story, a very funny skit on the men of Wiltshire, but ask a Wiltshire man about it and with a contented chuckle he will say:

"'Oh, yes, people tell as how they give the name o' 'moonrakers' to us Wiltshire people bekase a passel o' stoopids one night tried to rake the shadder o' the moon out o' the brook, takin' it for a thin cheese. But that's the wrong end o' the story. It's altogether the wrong end. Them chaps as was doin' this was smugglers and they was fishin' up some kegs o' brandy and only pretended to rake out a cheese. The policeman as axed 'em what they was about had a good laugh at 'em, but, by Harry! they had a better laugh at him when they got home with the stuff.'"

The Tough Chicken.

There are several ways of transforming a venerable fowl into a respectable family piece de resistance. In fact, by the following method such fowls have been made as tender as spring chickens: Let the bird, after drawing, seasoning and stuffing, simmer until over half done. Then place it in the oven with a piece of pork laid over its breast. Pour the liquor over and around the roast in the pan. Finish the cooking in a very hot oven, basting frequently with the drippings. When ready to serve skim off any superfluous fat that may be in the pan before preparing the gravy. The pork prevents the fowl from becoming dry, and if a small onion is also added it will have a more savory flavor. The simmering lessens its toughness. In fact, slow simmering is just the thing for any tough meat, but it should simmer, not boil. Boiling will toughen the tenderest of meat.

A Death Lure.

According to tradition, Kenith, the legendary king of Scotland, was allured to his death in a most novel manner. Kenith had slain a son and brother of Fennella, who to be avenged ordered Wiltus, a famous silversmith, to construct a death dealing statue of silver. In its right hand the statue held a basin and in the left hand an apple of pure gold, both set with diamonds and other precious stones. To touch the apple was to defy death, it being so arranged that any one guilty of such vandalism would be immediately riddled by poisoned arrows shot from openings in the body of the statue. Kenith was invited to inspect the wonder, and, as Fennella had hoped, he tried to pluck the precious imitation fruit. When his hand touched the apple he was wounded by the arrows and died where he fell.

Animal Life on Venus.

"There are many physical reasons for thinking that if any other planet besides the earth is inhabited it is probably Venus," says Professor Pickering. "It is about the same size as the earth, and its density is about the same. The force of gravity upon its surface is only slightly less than that on the earth. The temperature on Venus is probably the same as in our own tropics, and the dense atmosphere may be of a composition such as enveloped the earth when in the carboniferous period. As to the existence of intelligent life, the question is still open. If it is ever established that the planet Venus is inhabited it will be less surprising than if the same were proved conclusively of any other planet, owing to the similarity in many respects of Venus and the earth."

A Cotton Legend.

Cotton was the theme of one of the most fabulous nature stories on its first introduction into Europe. Travelers related that in Tartary there grew a shrub and that when its ripe fruit was cut open within was "a lyttle Beaste in flesche, in bone and blode as though it were a lyttle Lamb with outer wolle." The flesh of this "vegetable lamb" was eaten, ran the story, and the wool made into cloth. The basis of the legend is the way in which the cotton pod ripens and bursts, showing the white fluffy raw cotton, which closely resembles wool. Raw cotton is still called "cotton wool."

Daniel Wilson, His House.

Dr. Daniel Wilson, afterward principal of the University of Toronto, used in earlier days to live near Lauriston, in Scotland. One day Dr. John Beddoe (who has written an autobiography) set out to find him. "Having," he says, "no clear idea of the situation of the house, I entered St. Margaret's lane, which I conceived must lead in the right direction, and, meeting a gentleman just about to issue therefrom, asked whether he could direct me to Dr. Wilson's new house. He looked hard at me and inquired:

"'Do you know Daniel Wilson?' 'I do.' 'Intimately?' 'Yes, intimately.' 'Then follow this road till you see a house that looks as if it belongs to Daniel Wilson, and that will be it.' I thanked him and, following his advice, had no difficulty in identifying the house. It had a window which contained some tracery of a pattern which I knew Wilson considered peculiarly Scottish."

A Freak.

The elevator was waiting for passengers on the ground floor of the skyscraper when an excited woman fluttered over to the man running it.

"Does this car go up?" she inquired, breathless.

"No, madam," said the elevator man, unperturbed, "this is a crosstown car."—New York Times.

TORTURED FOR 15 YEARS

by a cure-defying stomach trouble that baffled doctors, and resisted all remedies he tried, John W. Modders, of Moddersville, Mich., seemed doomed. He had to sell his farm and give up work. His neighbors said he can't live much longer" "Whatever I ate distressed me," he wrote, "till I tried Electric Bitters, which worked such wonders for me that I can now eat things I could not take for years. The Arts of Asia.

It was Asia, through Arabia, which gave Europe the literature, the arts and the sciences which we have developed and of which we now boast. Gunpowder was probably invented in China. It was certainly introduced into Europe from Arabia. The finely tempered steel of Damascus went over from Arabia at the time of the Moorish invasion of Spain and its manufacture was continued at Toledo. The coppersmiths of Bagdad supplied the world's market with their wonderful productions centuries before there were any industries in Europe. Weaving of silk and cotton had its birth as an industry in Arabia, and the weaving of wool was learned by the crusaders in the same wonderful country. Astronomy, mathematics, the mariner's compass—all came to us from the Arabs.—Argonaut.

INTERVENTION NOT PROBABLE

Secretary of War Discusses Mexican Situation.

MAINTAIN NEUTRALITY LAWS

Reason for Sending Immense Body of United States Troops to the International Boundary.

New York, March 14.—"I do not believe there will be any movement of our troops into Mexico." This was the statement here of J. M. Dickinson, secretary of war, who plans to sail for Panama shortly.

"There can be no excuse for intervention," continued the secretary, "unless the Mexican government proves negligent in protecting the persons or the property of foreign residents, and such negligence would have to be firmly established, in my opinion, before any such step could be taken. There are no conditions now existing to give us such warrant.

"In order to maintain the neutrality laws it has been deemed advisable to send troops to the border on account of the immense length of the frontier and the fact that the Rio Grande can be crossed at almost any point a larger number of troops has been dispatched than otherwise would prove necessary."

MEXICANS ARE GRATIFIED

New York, March 14.—The Mexican ambassador here and the Mexican minister of finance received assurance from Washington which convinced them that there is sincere co-operation between the administration of President Taft and that of President Diaz. The edge of apprehension was appreciably blunted by two important pieces of news.

First in importance was a long telegram to Ambassador de la Barra from the state department at Washington announcing that the United States warships assigned to patrol duty on the Pacific and Gulf coasts of Mexico had been ordered to call at Mexican ports only for coal and then to withdraw promptly.

The second development was the publication here of an interview with Jacob M. Dickinson, the secretary of war.

MEXICAN CONGRESS ACTS

Approves Measure to Suspend Some Personal Rights.

Mexico City, March 14.—Mexico's proposed war measure which has attracted worldwide attention—the bill to suspend certain conceded personal rights under specified circumstances—was approved by the permanent commission of congress in the form as drafted by the department of the interior.

Following the usual course of such bills it will be given its second reading today and on Thursday final discussion.

That it will become a law there is practically no doubt, since there was no dissenting vote.

MILITIA OFFICERS RESPOND

Many Acceptances to Invitation to Southern Maneuvers.

Washington, March 14.—Enthusiasm of the officers of the militia of the various states and territories over the opportunity offered them by the war department for field experience in the present military operations in the Southern border states continues unabated. Since Saturday General Leonard Wood, chief of staff of the army, has received acceptances from 706 additional militia officers of the invitation to join "the maneuver division" at San Antonio, Tex., making a total of 1,950 acceptances.

THREE MEN PERISH IN FIRE

Cottage at Ohio Summer Resort Is Destroyed.

Ravenna, O., March 14.—Three men perished in the destruction by fire of a cottage at Sandy Lake, a summer resort four miles southwest of this city

They are George F. Doughitt of Ravenna, a lawyer, fifty years old, owner of the cottage; William Vargo, fifty-five years old, also of this city, a carpenter, and Harry Clark, thirty years old, a laborer of Breakneck Creek, O.

The three men had been making repairs at the cottage. Their charred bodies were found in the fire ruins. It is thought they were asleep when the fire broke out.

VOL. XII, THIEF RIVER FALLS, MINNESOTA, FRIDAY, MARCH 24, 1911. NO 32

DIRECT LEGISLATION DIES

Initiative and Referendum Defeated in House and Senate. Subterfuge offered.

The legislature of 1911.

More than week has gone since the biggest battle of the session. The passion and prejudice of actual conflict have passed away. Now men may measure the issue and the sequel exactly as they are.

So far as the independent action of the House could accomplish that result, direct legislation was killed March ninth. The vote by which H. F. No. 681 the initiative and referendum measure, drawn and championed by the progressives, was defeated was given last week. It should be republished here, because it is the most significant vote of the session. With the exception of a very few members who honestly objected to certain provisions of the bill, those voting in the negative did so either because they did not believe in the common intelligence and honesty of the people, or else because they desired to serve special interests whose monoply of politics and big business would have been endangered by direct legislation. No other vote in all the numerous roll calls in the course of the long contest between property and patriotism on this question so fairly expresses the attitude of members toward the initiative and referendum. So paste this record in your hat for future reference. The final vote on H. F. No. 681 was as follows, those voting "aye" being for an honest effective measure, those voting "no" being against the bill:

AYE—A. W. Anderson, J. J. Anderson, Boothroyd, Burnquist, Campbell, Christie, Conley, Converse, Crane, Davies, Davis, Farley, Ferguson, Frankson, Greene, Harding, Hillman, Holmberg, Holten, C. E. Johnson, J. N. Johnson, J. T. Johnson, Klemer, Kunze, I. J. Lee, J. F. Lee, Lindberg, Lundeen, McMartin, Mattson, Morton, A. Nelson, Nolan Nygren, O'Neill, Orr, Palmer, A. J. Peterson, J. E. Peterson, Putnam, Ribenack, Rines, Robertson, Robinson, Rustad, Sampson, Skartum, Spooner, W. T. Stone, Sulerud, Voxland, E. Warner, Webb, Whiting.—54.

The legislative road leading to this record is full of crooks and turns. Perhaps I may be able to indicate an occasional land mark along the way.

In a national sense, the great combined property power in politics is represented by three groups: (1) the transportation trust; (2) the industrial corporations, like Standard Oil; and (3) the public utility companies. All of these were opposed to the enactment of a bona fide initiative and referendum law by the Minnesota Legislature, because this state is a part of the whole federal field in which they harvest a monthly crop of special privilege through their control of politics and politicians. Direct legislation would restore goverment to the people and serve, to re-establish equality of industrial and political opportunity. Accordingly the national machine had a hand in shaping that roll call.

In this state the "system" is composed of five elements: (1) the steel trust; (2) the railroad companies; (3) a number of tramp corporations, like the Twin City Rapid Transit Co.; (4) the liquor interests; and (5) scores of professional politicians. For reasons that are obvious the state system influenced that roll call sufficiently to make necessary this unpleasant recital of the story.

The brewers fashioned the fight from inception to finish. Their lobbyist s, in and out of the legislature, made and manipulated the combination that finally yielded the sixty-two votes against the people. This was not an easy task and to accomplish it they had to create delays, in order to gain more recruits through deception and subterfuge. Four or five were "fooled" into taking the position that they did. But the brewery machine was built, and I have never seen a more compact and perfectly operating organization. Not once during the two days' struggle did the politicians make a mistake or lose control of the combination.

When the battle began at eleven o'clock H. F. No. 681 was a good bill, one of the best that could be drawn on the subject. Through five hours of speeches and attempted amendments the measure remained practically the same. And in that connection occurred a legislative anomaly that I never expect to see equalled. The progressives tried to make the bill worse by amendments. The brewery leaders successfully opposed every important change for the worse. The progressives knew that the reactionaries would not support the measure without certain concessions and accordingly the friends of the bill tried to yield enough to add a few votes. The brewery crowd knew that they had votes enough to kill the bill in the effective form in which it was introduced and they opposed every vital amendment to make it less effective through fear that it might become so bad that some of their men would vote for it. The people ought to know that a number of members who were a part of the combination which opposed the adoption of certain amendments urged the failures for voting against it on its final passage. Verily, "the voice was Jacob's voice, but the hands were the hands of Essau."

All these suggestions relate to the roll call published above, which defeated the progressive initiative and referendum bill and ended the first day's fight.

The following morning the "special order" was continued and the brewery subterfuge was considered. It is the opinion of the progressives in the legislature and it is my opinion that "the Pfaender 35—percent bill" was presented largely for the purpose of killing an effective measure. This bill, as has been explained in previous letters, was at the beginning. But it was not deemed sufficient that it provided for percentages which made it practically worthless. Its friends, the brewery element, made it even worse by amendments. They wanted to make it so bad that the progressives would join with those of their forces who were bold enough to oppose any bill on the subject, and avote against it.

First, Mr. Pfaender had adopted an amendment which made it impossible to initiate legislation with less percentages than those named in his bill.

Then an amendment was adopted which made it impossible for the people to initiate constitutional amendments as they could other laws. This was aimed at such questions as woman suffrage.

Next Mr. Fowler championed an amendment which provided a further and almost insurmountable handicap for the people by requiring that each law initiated by them must be of a majority of those of all votes cast at the election, instead of a majority of those voting on that particular question.

As a final safeguard for the interests, two amendments aimed at organized labor were voted into the bill. The first offered by Mr. Hopkins, provided that the people should not have the right to initiate a law unless it had been before the legislature and had received at least 20 percent of the votes of either House or Senate; which would not enable labor to use the law on many of the reforms they are working for, because a large number of their measures are killed by committees and never get even one vote on their final passage. The other amendment against organized labor was offered by Mr. Pfaender, and provided that the signers of an initiative petition must be "So distributed as to include at least seven percentum of the legal voters in each of at least three-fifths of, the counties of the state."

This "wise" provision would make it impossible for the labor element to initiate any law because their forces are conjested in a few centers.

With these many and ample "safe guards," the Pfaender bill was passed by the following vote of 63 to 50:

Those voting in the affirmative were: A. V. Anderson, J. J. Anderson, Boothroyd, Burnquist, Campbell, Clarke, Davies, Davis, Ferguson, Fowler, Frankson, Herzberg, Hillman, Holmberg, Holten, Hopkins Hurley, C. E. Johnson, J. T. Johnson Just, Keefe, Kelly, Klemer, Knapp, Kneeland, Knutson, I. J. Lee, J. F. Lee S. N. Lee, Lenon, Lundeen,ñ McNeill, Mattson, Mettling, Minnette, Morton, Nash, H. Nelson, Nye, Nygren, O'Brien, O'Neill, Palmer, Pfaender, Putnam, Ribenack, Rice, Rines, Robertson, Robinson, Rustad, Sampson, Schuler, Sowartz, Sulerud, Sullivan, Utecht, Voxland, Washburn, Webb, White, Whiting, and Wisniewski—63.

Those voting in the negative were: Aker, Andrew Anderson, Borgen, Bouck, G. W. Brown, Christie, Conley, Converse, Denzer, Diessner, R. C. Dunn, Edwards, Fuchs, Greene, Hafften, Harding Hauge, Healy, Henion, Jelinek, J. N. Johnson, Kunze, Libera, Lydiard, McDonald, McKenzie, McMartin, Moriarity, A. Nelson, Nolan, Orr, Papke, Perry, Peters A. J. Peterson, J. E. Peterson, O. Peterson, Reed, Saggau, Skartum, C. E. Stone, Thielen, Untiedt, Virtue, C. H. Warner, E. Warner, Wescott, and Speaker H. H. Dunn—50.

The fifty-four progressives who supported the honest measure divided on the final passage of the Pfaender bill. But I think all were agreed that it was worthless. Because of that conviction a number voted against it. Others of the progressives voted for it in the hope that the Senate would amend it into effective form. Figure it any way you will, the brewers won the House battle. Now it is up to the Senate to do something with the subterfuge.

STEENERSON'S LETTER

Washington, D. C. March 18, 1911.

Thief River Press,
Thief River Falls,
Minnesota.

Gentlemen:

For the information of the settlers on lands in the Eleven Towns, I have the honor to advise you that the time in which to make payments and final proof on all such land expires on March 26, 1912.

Hoping you will give the publicity of this matter special attention, I remain

Your very truly,
H. Steenerson.

NOTICE TO TOWN BOARDS

W. R. Hoag, engineer in charge of the work on Judicial Ditch No. 11, wishes to have it stated through the columns of the "Press' to the various town boards of the towns affected that he desires to advise with the different town boards as the work progresses in regard to the leveling of waste-banks for highway purposes. At the time the viewers went over the proposed ditches it was possible only to make an estimate of the cost of leveling for highway purposes, because it was not yet decided which or how many of the banks were to be immediately converted into roads by leveling. Now this question has to be settled pretty soon, and Mr. Hoag is anxious to have the town Board's advice as to which banks should be leveled at once when dug and which are to be left untouched until growing needs demand their completion. Provision in the estimate made will allow for the completion of about three-fourths of them as fast as they are dug.

SALOONS MUST GO.

Last Tuesday saw the saloons ousted from Warren by a majority of over 30 votes. The contest was a heated one and on the eve of election both sides claimed the victory. A consideration for their schools and for the welfare of those attending them no doubt influenced the votes of many of Warren's citizens, and when the polls were closed and the count made the progressives held the field as above noted.

Say Mr. Taxpayer, the bonds are again sold at par as the three weeks are again up. This time the bonds are sold to the Northwestern Creamery Association of Grygla or the Northwestern Green Frog Association of Squaw Point. I don't know which. On Sunday March the fourteenth the wind blew the "Kivoring", off the White Elephant filling the alley full of "Ould Fiskeboller Cans; Ould Boilers and Tar Paper Comprising the roof of the Famous White Elephant and all this put on at enormous expenses to keep out the rain from destroying the Four thousand Dollar decoration on the inside." This beautiful White Elephant eats high priced hay all the time, but never pays a cent into the city treasury. Has anyone seen the City annual financial statement that should have been published in January? No, man, no! nor they don't want you to see it. It is like some of the work that was "dun". Never let at contract at all. At the last election for bonds, our great financeers and "knowen men" told us what a great paying thing it was going to be. May be it is for some, but the poor Tax Payer never sees any statement of it, but fast living Automobiles and Gasoline all costs money to buy. Say, Mr. Tax-payer, if some of you just look up the Financial condition of our good little city I think you willl be like the "Ground Hog" was Feb. 2. Go back in the hole and take the hole in with you.

Yours truly,
Chas. Alexander.

GRASS SEED DISTRIBUTION

Bill Passed Providing Free Grass Seed On Burnt Over District.

The Press learns that a movement is on foot whereby some of our citizens, who have land in Eastern Pennington and Marshall counties, expect to procure free grass seed from the state with which to seed in land held by them which was overrun by forest fires last fall.

The present legislature has passed a bill appropriating $25,000 to the Department of Agriculture of the University of Minnesota for the purpose of purchasing timothy, clover, and red-top seed for this purpose and for experimental purposes on state lands. The bill also provides for the manner of its distribution.

We would urge all, that are entitled under this act to free grass seed, to file application for same with our County Auditor at once. Much of this burnt over land will become infested and overgrown with noxious weeds if nothing is done, when, if seeded at this opportune time, it might as well grow up to redtop, clover or timothy and become a blessing to the community.

Following is the full text of the bill in question:

A BILL

For an Act to Appropriate Money to the Department of Agriculture of the University of Minnesota for the Purpose of Purchasing Timothy? Clover and Redtop Seed for Settlers' Lands? and for Experimental Purposes on State Lands Burned Over in Part or in Whole by the Forest Fires in the Year 1910, and to Provide for the Manner of its Distribution.

Be it enacted by the Legislature of the State of Minnesota:

Section I. That the sum of twenty-five Thousand dollars or so much thereof as may be necessary, 2 be and the same hereby is appropriated out of any money in the State Treasury not otherwise appropriated 3 to the Department of Agriculture of the University, for the purpose of purchasing 4 timothy, clover and redtop seed, and such other seed as may be recommended by the dean 5 of said Department, for settlers' lands State lands burned over in 6 part or in whole by the fires in the year 1910.

Section 2. Any person desiring to avail himself of the benefits of this act, whose land was burned2 over in part or in whole by the forest fires of 1910, shall make an application in writing, verified by 3 his oath, stating the number of acres that were burned, and the number of such acres he plans to sow 4 to grass in the season of 1911, and the number of pounds of timothy, clover and redtop seed 5 necessary to sow the same, which application he shall file with the Auditor of the County in which he 6 resides. It shall be the duty of the County Auditor to file all such applications by him received, and 7 on or before March 15, 1911, he shall give public notice by publication in the official paper of the 8 county for at least one week before the day of meeting, that the County Commissioners of said 9 County will meet at his office at a date to be named at said notice, for the purpose of considering 10 the applications which may be received on or before the day of such meeting. The Board of County 11 Commissioners shall meet on the date so fixed by the Auditor and consider all such applications, and 12 make all necessary inquiries into the circumstances of such applicant to ascertain that his case comes 13 within the intent of this act, and thereupon shall, by resolution, fix the amount of timothy, clover and 14 red top seed to be allowed to each applicant, and the total amount for which said county makes 15 application; and the said County Auditor shall forthwith transmit a copy of such resolution to the 16 Dean of the Department of Agriculture of the University of Minnesota, who shall file the same in 17 his office, and such resolution shall be deemed and taken to be an application by said county for the 18 amount of timothy, clover and redtop seed specified in said resolution.

Section 3. The Dean of the Department of Agriculture of the University of Minnesota shall immediately 2 upon their receipt consider all the applications certified to him as aforesaid and shall thereupon dis- 3 tribute the timothy, clover and redtop seed purchased by moneys made available by this act, between 4 the several counties whose Auditors have certified said applications; and in case the amount of seed 5 made available by this act is less than the amount asked for by said counties, said Dean shall set 6 apart to each applicant such proportion to amount of its application as the amount asked for bears to 7 the whole amount applicable under this act. But no county shall be awarded a greater amount of seed 8 than is known to have been applied for. The amount o timothy, clover and redtop seed alloted each 9 county shall be sent to the Auditor of such county; but before sending same the Dean of the 10. Department of the University of Minnesota shall seal the amount each applicant is entitled to, 11 separately and attach applicants name thereto. It shall be the duty of the County Auditor to 12 distribute the seed to the applicants, but before delivering said seed the Auditor shall require a receipt 13 for the same from said applicants.

Section 4. Where the Department of Agriculture of the University of Minnesota deems it necessary 2 for the suppression of noxious weeds and for experimental purposes to sow timothy, clover and redtop 3 seeds on burned over State lands, said Department is hereby authorized to do so with seed purchased 4 under this act. But no State land shall be so seeded unless situated in a settled community and until 5 settlers have been supplied as provided in Section three of this act.

Section 5. Any county Commissioner who knowingly allows or aids in allowing to any such applicant 2 under this act any timothy, clover or redtop seed, unless such applicant belongs to the class referred 8 to, who is destitute of needed seeds, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor.

LOSES BARN

Ellev Aakre of town of Reiner lost his barn, harnesses and hay by fire on Thursday of last week. Another case of "a little boy with a match." Right at the corner of the barn he struck it. It broke off and the head fell down among the hay and other litter. He looked for it but saw nothing. Forgot about it for a minute; then noticed a little fire swept in by the wind right into the haymow through a hole in the wall just where he had stood when striking the match. The hole was down at the ground and the hay of the mow stuck out through it. In an instant the whole barn was a mass of flames and in short order Mr. Akre's new barn, hardly completed, built on borrowed money, was reduced to ashes. Now he has no barn for his horses, only the debt to show for it; he has no money and no more credit with which to build again. His neighbors, being of the kind that "care" have decided to try to bring him aid. He is worthy, and if you, dear reader would like to add your "mite", subscription lists will be in the hands of the Postmasters at Eire Torgerson and Highlanding and at the Press and Central Hotel here in the city. We ask your consideration and benevolence.

THINGS SEEN AND HEARD

A Cedar Falls, Ia. paper has the following:

"In your valued record the farmer reads many a thing that sounds funny to him," said a prominent farmer Monday." And I will try to tell you why many of us trade at other towns or send to catalogue houses. When the farmer's wife starts to town she is dressed as neat as any city lady but when she reaches the city after a ride of from 4 to 10 miles thru the mud, dust, cold, or heat her clothing is disarranged, her hat blown to one side, and splattered with mud or covered with dust and her face blue or burned with hot wind or sun. Then when Mrs. Country goes into a dry goods store the clerks each wait to see if the other one will wait on her for they see she is from the country, and are not particular whether they show her just what she wants or not. Then next we go to the grocery store and stand and wait until Mrs. City buys a quarters worth of sugar, ten cents worth of tea and one-half dozen of oranges and has it charged and tells them to send it up before dinner and it is half past eleven o'clock then.

Then she talks awhile about the Parlor Reading Circle or the P. E. O., then steps out and meets some country women and nearly crowds her off the walk. When the grocery man finally have nothing else to do they will ask Mrs. Country if she wanted anything. She will buy enough to last a week or a month and pay the cash. Then when her husband drives up to the store to get the goods the wife can carry out the things and load them for the husband has to hold the colt or high life team he is driving and the grocery man is busy talking to another Mrs. City that is asking the price of all his stock and then tells him she will look around a little, goes out, and in about an hour comes back and asks the price again, then goes out and goes to Waterloo and buys what she wants for one cent per pound less and pays a quarter for her street car fare.

Arthur Tanem returned here last Tuesday evening after a few days visit at Duluth, Minneapolis and Still water.

DEMOCRATS FAVOR RECIPROCITY

May also Pass Amendments to Wool, Cotton and Food Schedules.

Washington, D. C., March, 22nd, 1911.—These are busy times with the National Progressive Republican League, organized in this city the latter part of January. Although in its infancy, the organization has developed rapidly and is a most active force in shaping popular government legislation in a number of the States. Recently the Minnesota Progressive Republican League has affiliated with the National League. This is for the purpose of harmonious action and co-operation.

From reports received here as to conditions in Minnesota it is evident that sentiment is crystalizing very rapidly in favor of the program mapped out by the Progressives. This program, as is quite geneally known, includes the referendum and recall, the initiative, corrupt practices act and the presidential preference bill. Information received here indicates that progressive sentiment is stong in the first, third, fifth, sixth, seventh and ninth congressional districts. In the fourth, or St. Paul district, the progressive movement, according to reports, has had the hardest sledding for that reason sentiment there is perhaps the weakest. This is accounted for partly because of the centralization in this district of two orthree special interests, which would naturally oppose the program of the Progressive Republicans.

The friends here of progressive legislation have been watching with interest the progress of the initiative and referendum bill in the Minnesota state legislature. The Pfaender bill which recently passed the House, provided for such a high percentage of signers to petitions as to make the use of the initiative and referendum practically prohibitive. There has been some speculation as to whether or not the measure was amended for the sole purpose of crippling it. Attention is drawn to the fact that down in Kansas an attempt was made to cripple an initiative and referendum resolution by attaching a prohibitive amendment, but it was defeated by the Senate. Similiar attempts were made in Nebraska and elsewhere.

Opponents to progressive legislation, such as the initiative and referendum, are in the habit of tucking away in the folds of a resolution some apparently harmless amendment, which turns out to be a joker. The standard all over the United States is 5 per cent for the referendum and 8 per cent for the initiative Higher percentages than these are prohibitive and make it only workable by big business interests or political orgaizations which have an abundance of money to spend.

Another joker to be avoided, in the opinion of the Progressive League officers, is found in the Oklahoma laws. In that State laws proposed by the initiative must get a majority of all votes cast in election. This is the favorite joker of the corporation lobbyist and utterly destroyes initiative. In Oklahoma five good measures enacted by majorities of from 27,,994 to 58,994 of the citizens voting on those questions in the elections of 1908 and 1910 were lost, because the ignorant and careless voter did not vote at all. Consequently, they were counted against the measure.

Another indirect method employed to strangle the initiative and referendum is that requiring that petitions be signed by a percentage of counties. In Montana this requirement is two-fifths of the counties and the result has been that not a single question has ever been submitted under it in that State, the reason being that it requires a powerful organization to carry the petition through. In South Dakota the initative is apparently of little value, since a law proposed by petition cannot be voted on by the people unless the legislature permit it.

Another important joker, according to Progressive League members, is one providing that all laws must first be submitted to the legislature which may adopt them. The objection to this provision is that it delays action on all measures for possibly two years.

Driven to the use of these indirect methods of strangling progressive legislation in some of the States, the enemies of these measures may be successful in their attempts temporarily. The initiative and referendum is bound to be adopted in all States,-so its friends assert,-in a very short time. The National Progressive Republican League realizes that there is danger in this flank attack, and, in its opinion, it is better to wait two years, or four years, for a workable amendment, rather than accept a worthless one at the present time.

Senator Clapp, who is an enthusiastic worker in the popular government movement and the chairman of the executive committee of the League, is devoting much of his time during the recess of Congress to addressing meetings. He speaks on popular government, the initiative and referendum, and in general, the program of the Progressive Republicans. He has recently spoken in Michigan and later on will go to Massachusetts for a series of addresses, after which he speaks in New York State. Towards the end of the month he will go to Wheeling, West Va,. to deliver an address on popular government, and possibly may swing up into Illinois and Minnesota. Representative Lenroot of Wisconsin has arranged to go to Minnesota March 25 to speak for the League.

PEOPLE'S WEAL AT STAKE

Bill To Control Telephone Companies. O'Neill Favors, Hamre et al Oppose.

A bill is before the state legislature which aims to bring the telephone companies of the state under state control. As near as could be learned before going to press it provides, first, for a Public Utilities Commission which is to have full supervision over the telephone companies of the state. It provides for a uniform system of accounting. This will do away with discriminating rates. Each Company will have to charge the same for like service all over the state and the rates of all companies will be uniform for a given service. It provides that where that where there is a telephone system opperating in the community no other company can build a second telephone exchange in that community without securing the consent of the aforesaid public Utilities commission. It provides further that wherever one or more toll or long-distance lines enter a city or village in which there is a telephone exchange already, these lines so entering shall connect with that exchange. This will make one continuous telephone network over the entire state and will connect up every telephone user in the state with every other telephone user in the state.

Representative D. P. O'Neill after giving the measure careful consideration has decided that it is good, that it is a step in the right direction, that it is a bill for the benefit of the people and that he will support it. He further states that certain men from Thief River Falls are hovering about the state house lobbying against this bill of the people.

Looking over our news-list for the week we find that Mayor T. P. Hamre, Milton Forder and Emil Sedlacek of the Council are in the Cities; so too is A. H. Fasel, county auditor.

Inquiring further into this mysterious situation we learn that a Mr. Bracelyn, District Manager of the Northwestern Telephone Co. of Crookston was in our city the latter days of last week, and that he was in close conference with certain of our present city administration and their Attorney. The sentiment of the people here is generally favorable to the bill; it seems to promise to correct most of our local telephone ills at a simple stroke.

This bill introduced in the Senate by Rockne and Moonan as S. F. No. 678: and in the House by Minette and Sewartz as H. F. No. 878; was to be considered yesterday in the House on special order but was continued to come up Friday, March 24 (today). What the fate of this bill is to be no one can yet say.

A Bird That Is Feared.

The elster (Pica caudata) is a bird that is respected and feared throughout south Germany. It belongs to the raven tribe and is about the size of a dove, with black and white feathers and long, pointed tail. It builds its nest in orchards, and its life is sacred. If it is seen three times in succession on the same housetop in a place remote from its home it is believed to be a sure sign of death in that house. If it flies over a house where any one is ill and gives its peculiar cry the sick person is sure to die, but if it does not scream the patient may recover. It is better for the sick person if the bird does not come near. No one could be hired to bother these birds for fear they might seek revenge, and if by chance one of them should die it is a sign of bad luck to the owner of the property where it is found. The bird is a valuable insect destroyer and in this way probably more than compensates for the fear it occasions among the farmers.

Cursing In Korea.

A strange way of cursing is that of the Korean. His ordinary swear word is "Oenuma," or "You brute." The Japanese have the same partiality for this term of endearment. But according to the Oriental Economic Review the Korean considers himself especially abusive when he calls a person his child or grandchild. When he wants to call somebody down the Korean demands hotly, "Are you not my child?" And the angry retort is: "What! I your child? You are my grandchild." Then the first goes a step further and cries, "You are a grandchild of my grandchild!" to which the rejoinder is: "You conceited fellow! Have you forgotten that you are a grandchild of a grandchild of my grandchild?" When their vituperation reaches its climax the people of Chosen at last come to the occidental standard of exclaiming, "You grandchild of a dog!"

Servants In Turkey.

Turkey is not nearly so benighted as we imagine, for there is no servant question there. Though slavery is still recognized, the kadun (mistress of the house) is a mother to her servants whom she treats as children, and no children in the world are better treated than Turkish children. The most painful thing the kadun can do to a maid is to say: "The master has found a good husband for thee. Thou wilt be married at such and such a time."

"Oh, mistress, what have I done to be thus abandoned?" is the usual sorrowful response.

Even after the servant's marriage the kindly relations between mistress and maid continue. There are no fixed servant wages in Turkey. Faithful servants are rewarded from time to time in accordance with their masters' or mistresses' good pleasure or circumstances.—Chicago Journal.

Origin of Dukes.

The word duke comes from the Latin "dux," a leader. In early Saxon times the commanders of armies were called dukes—i. e., the leaders of the soldiery. In other words, the first duke was the first best fighting man. No regard was had to ancestry or present attainments or any other sort of thing beyond the simple matter of warlike efficiency. Naturally the leader of the fighting would when the fighting was over come in for the lion's share of the spoils and "honors," and naturally again the rest of the folks would "look up" to him, and by degrees his superiority would be imparted to his family, and a "nobility" would spring into being. It all rested, to start with, on brute force and animal courage combined with cunning in clubbing and thrusting.—New York American.

Colored Hailstones.

Red hail is not unknown, even in Great Britain, for in May of 1885 there was quite a heavy fall of it at Castlewellan, in County Down. Red and white fell together, and the red hue was not merely on the surface of the pellets, but went through and through. When one was squeezed between the fingers it stained them.

At Minsk, in Russia, an even stranger hail shower had fallen five years before. Some of the pellets were ring shaped, and, while some were distinctly reddish, others were a bright blue. Some scientists declare that the coloring is due to various mineral salts.

A Feeling Allusion.

"I heard Uncle Joe talking about something he said he saw at the horse races, but I know better," confided the recently chastised small boy to his chum. "He saw 'em right here, and they're my ma and pa."

"What did he say?" asked the chum.

"He said he saw a spanking team."

A Woman's Letter.

Women, it is generally admitted, write much better letters than men. M. Marcel Prevost discovered the reason for this superiority. "The obvious meaning is never the one we should read into a woman's letter. There is always a veiled meaning. Woman makes use of a letter just as she employs a glance or a smile, in a way that is carefully thought out and with an eye to effect. And, after all, does a woman's hat serve to cover her head? Does a woman's parasol keep off the sun? Why, then, should a woman's letter serve to convey her real thoughts to the person addressed, just like the letters of some honest grocer, who writes, 'I send you five pounds of coffee," because he really does send you five pounds of coffee?'—London Spectator.

Long Distance Courtship.

A lady was one day approached by her Scotch maid with the information that she was about to leave. "What is the cause of this sudden decision, Mary?"

"I think I'll be a-marryin'."

"Indeed, and whom, may I ask?"

"The mon that sits across in the kirk o' Sundays."

"But what is his name?"

"I dinna ken."

"What! You're surely not engaged to a man whose name you do not know!"

"Not engaged, my lady, but he's ben lang lookin' at me, an' I think he'll soon be speakin'."—Housekeeper.

Matchmaking In Roumania.

In Roumania once every year is a fair of marriageable girls. The girl, with her relations, gets into a wagon, which also contains her dowry—linen, furniture and household matters—and all set off for the fair. When they arrive the girls are drawn up in one line and the men in another, with their parents behind them. Then if a young man likes the look of any particular girl he talks to her while the parents compare notes as to their possessions and their circumstances in life. If all is found satisfactory there's a marriage at once, and the bride is driven away by her husband to her new home.

Attendance has been good and a case of tardiness has been an exception. Sewing has been taught in school all year. CO. LINE SCHOOL.

Here we are again after a two weeks absence.

The civic class with the aid of the rest of the school made up a civil trial last week. We had a jury, clerk of court sheriff, plaintiff and, defendant and some experienced lawyers too. The defendant was pronounced not guilty and our poor plaintiff had to pay all the costs which amounted to fully fifty cents.

A question box with a few essays was given at our club meeting last week. Some very interesting questions were asked.

Esther Kelberg was absent from school Friday and our Vice Pres. had charge of the club meeting which was held on Friday afternoon.

We have noticed that some of our skaters, on the evening of the first day they had been skating had a hard time to get to school the next morning. Wonder why?

Mabel Kelberg was absent from school last Friday.

Say! "East girls", how did you get home on your skates the other night? Were you thinking of your beloved grammer lessons, or what?

Some of the boys are trying to learn to skate but I guess they find it rather hard. Skates ought to be made flat should nt they?

We are all glad to see that spring is coming. The crows have been seen so it must be a sure thing.

Our teacher, Miss Backe, who had part in the Norwegian play last Friday evening, let us out earlier than usual so as to catch the G. N. passenger to Thief River Falls. We all wished we could have gone with her.

Ruth Solem was absent from school last week.

Say Mabel, next time you go to town you had better get a pair of skates since you have learned skating and teach the rest also.

Cavanagh, Forest Ranger

The Great Conservation Novel

By HAMLIN GARLAND

Copyright, 1910, by Hamlin Garland

I was homesick for the mountains in a month. But what scared me most was the pauper population of the old place—one in every thirty-seven must be helped. I came back to the States gladly. 'I guess I'm an American,' I said to my sisters."

To Lee Virginia the talk of "the curse of democracy" and "the decay of empire" was unexciting, but when Cavanagh told of the sheepmen's advance across the dead line on Deer creek and of the threats of the cattle owners she was better able to follow the discussion. Bridges was heartily on the side of law and order, for he wished to boom the state (being a heavy owner in a town site), but he objected to Redfield's ideas of "bottling up the resources of the state."

"But we're not," retorted Redfield; "we're merely defending them against those who would monopolize them. We believe in their fullest use, but we see no reason for giving away the resources when the country needs the revenue."

Mrs. Redfield rose as soon as the coffee came on. "You gentlemen seem bent upon discussing matters of no interest to us," she said, "so we'll leave you to fight it out alone. I'm sure you'll all agree with Hugh in the end. Like General Grant, he's a very obstinate man."

No sooner were they seated in the big living room than Mrs. Enderby began to relate comical stories of her household. Her cats had fits and ran up the wall. Her dogs were forever getting quilled by reason of foolish attacks upon porcupines, or else they came home so reminiscent of skunks that they all but smothered the cook. "Invariably they return from encounters of this kind just as we are sitting at dinner," she explained. "Furthermore, Enderby's ditches are habitually getting clogged and overflowing the lawn and filling the cellar, and he stands in terror of his cowboys. When I think of all these irruptions and distractions England's order and routine seem heavenly. But Charley finds all this amusing, more's the pity, and leaves me to set things in order. Most ludicrous of all to me is his habitual claim that the ranch is paying. I tell him there's an error in his bookkeeping somewhere, but he assures me that his receipts exceeded his expenditures last year, which is quite too incredible. You've no idea how high wages are and how little we raise."

"Oh, yes, I have," laughed Mrs. Redfield. "And my cat had a fit too. Hugh says it's the high altitude. I tell him it's melancholia."

Cavanagh showed himself. "I hear so much laughter I'm coming in. We're all so insufferably political out here, and, besides, I came to see the ladies, and I can stay only a few minutes longer."

"You're not going back tonight?" exclaimed his hostess.

"I must be on my own precinct by daylight," he replied. "The supervisor has an eye on me."

Mrs. Redfield explained to Lee Virginia, "He rode fifty miles over the mountains"—

"Thirty," corrected Ross. "But what does that matter when I'm in the company of such charming ladies?" he added gallantly.

"And now he's going to ride all the way back tonight."

"Think of that!" gasped Mrs. Enderby. "And no moon!"

"How can you find your way?" asked Mrs. Bridges, to whom this was a mortally dangerous journey.

"Oh, it's quite simple! If you don't bump against a tree or fall into the creek you may be quite sure you're on the trail," laughed Ross.

Mrs. Redfield knew the true reason for his coming and was not at all pleased, "for with all Lee's personal charm," she said to her husband, "she is socially beneath Ross Cavanagh even in a state where social barriers are few."

"Come out on the veranda," suggested Cavanagh, "and I'll show you the hills I must climb."

Lee accepted innocently, but as the young people left the room Mrs. Enderby looked at her hostess with significant glance. "There's the lady Ross rode down to meet. Who is she?"

"Her mother is that dreadful old creature that keeps the Wetherford hotel in Roaring Fork."

"No!" exclaimed Mrs. Enderby.

"Yes; Lee Virginia is Lize Wetherford's daughter."

"But the girl is charming."

"I cannot understand it. Hugh came home a week or so ago full of her praise"— And at this point her voice dropped lower, and the other drew closer.

CHAPTER VIII.

THE CASE OF LEE VIRGINIA AND ROSS.

Lee and Ross stood in silence on the Redfield veranda. There was no moon, and the mountains rose darkly, a sheer wall at the end of the garden, their tops cutting into the starry sky with a dull edge, over which a dim white cone peered.

"That snow peak is Wolftooth and thirty miles from here and at the head of my 'beat,'" said the ranger after a pause as they leaned against the railing and looked away to the south. "I go up that ridge which you see faintly at the left of the main canyon and through that deep notch which is above timber line."

The girl's eyes widened with awe of the big, silent, dark world he indicated. "Aren't you afraid to start out on such a trip alone—I mean, don't you dread it?"

"I'll be sorry to start back, yes, but not because of the dark. I've enjoyed my visit here so much it will be hard to say good night."

"It seems strange to me that you should prefer this wild country to England."

"Do you like the east better than the west?"

"In some ways; but, then, you see, I was born out here."

"So was I—I mean to say I was regenerated out here. The truth is I was a good deal of a scapegrace when I left England. I was always for hunting and horses, and naturally I came directly to the wild west country, and here I've been ever since. I've had my turn at each phase of it—cowpuncher, soldier, rough rider and finally forest ranger. I reckon I've found my job at last."

"Do you like it so much?"

"At the present time I am perfectly contented. I'm associated now with a country that will never yield to the plow. Yes, I like my work. I love the forests and the streams. I wish I might show them to you. You don't know how beautiful they are. The most beautiful parks in the world are commonplace to what I can show you. My only sorrow is to think of them given over to the sawmill. Perhaps you and your mother will come up some time and let me show you my lakes and streams. There are waters so lovely they make the heart ache. Hugh is planning to come up soon; perhaps you and Mrs. Redfield will come with him."

"I'd like it above everything," she responded fervently. Then her voice changed. "But all depends on my mother's health."

It hurt him to hear her call Eliza Wetherford mother. He wanted to forget her origin for the moment. He was not in love with her—far from it! But she was so alluring, and the proprietress of the Wetherford House was not nice, and that made one doubt the daughter.

She broke the silence. "It seems dreadfully dark and mysterious up there." She indicated his path.

"It isn't as bad as it looks. There is a good trail, and my pony knows it as well as I do. I enjoy riding by night."

"But there are bears and other wild things, are there not?"

"Not as much as I wish there were."

"Why do you say that?"

"I hate to see all the wild life killed off. Some day all these forests will have game refuges like the Yellowstone National park. They are coming each year to have greater and greater value to the people of the plains. They are playgrounds, like the Alps. If I should ever settle down to a home it would be in a canyon like this, with a great peak at my front door."

"It is beautiful," the girl said in the tone of sadness with which we confront the perfect night, the perfect flower, the flawless landscape. "It is both grand and peaceful."

This tone of sadness pleased him. It showed her depth of perception, and he reflected that she had not uttered a vacuous or silly phrase since their first meeting. "She is capable of great development," he thought. Aloud he said: "You are a strange mingling of east and west. Do you realize it?"

"In what way?" she asked, feeling something ardent in his tone.

"You typify to me at this moment this whole state. You fill me with enthusiasm for its future. Here you are, derived from the lawless west, yet taking on the culture and restraint of the east so readily that you seem not in the least related to"—

He checked himself at this point, and she said, "My mother is not as rough as she seems, Mr. Cavanagh."

"She must be more of the woman than appears or she could not have borne such a daughter. But do you feel your relationship to her? Tell me honestly, for you interest me." [illegible]

[illegible] at first, but I do now. I begin to understand her, and, besides, I feel in myself certain things that are in her, though I think I am more like the Wetherfords. My father's family home was in Maryland."

Ross could have talked on all night, so alluring was the girl's dimly seen yet warmly felt figure at his side, but a sense of danger and a knowledge that he should be riding led him at last to say: "It is getting chill. We must go in, but before we do so let me say how much I've enjoyed seeing you again. I hope the doctor will make favorable report on your mother's case. You'll write me the result of the examination, won't you?"

"If you wish me to."

"I shall be most anxious to know."

They were standing very near to each other at the moment, and the ranger, made very sensitive to woman's charm by his lonely life, shook with newly created love of her. A suspicion, a hope, that beneath her cultivated manner lay the passionate nature of her mother gave an added force to his desire. He was sorely tempted to touch her, to test her, but her sweet voice, a little sad and perfectly unconscious of evil, calmed him. She said:

"I hope to persuade my mother to leave the Forks. All the best people there are against us. Some of them have been very cruel to her and to me, and, besides, I despise and fear the men who come to our table."

"You must not exchange words with them," he all but commanded. "Beware of Gregg; he is a vile lot. Do not trust him for an instant. Do not permit any of those loafers to talk with you, for if you do they will go away to defame you. I know them. They are unspeakably vile. It makes me angry to think that Gregg and his like have the right to speak to you every day, while I can see you only at long intervals. I wish my station were not so far away. But I'll ride down as often as my duties will permit, and you must let me know how things go. And if any of those fellows persecute you you'll tell me, won't you? I wish you'd look upon me as your big brother. Will you do that?" His voice entreated, and as she remained silent he continued: "Roaring Fork is one of the worst towns in the state, and a girl like you needs some one as a protector. I don't know just how to put it so that you will not misunderstand me, but, you see, I protect the forest, the streams and the game, I help the settler in time of trouble, I am a kind of all round big brother to everybody who needs help in the forest. In fact, I'm paid for protecting things that can't protect themselves, and so"—here he tried to lend his voice the accent of humor—"why shouldn't I be the protector of a girl like you; alone—worse than alone—in this little cow town?"

She remained dumb at one or two points where he clearly hoped for a word, and she was unable to thank him when he had finished. In this silence a curious constriction came into his throat. It was almost as if he had put his passion into definite words, and as the light fell upon her he perceived that her bosom was heaving with deep emotion.

"I am lonely," she faltered out at last—"horribly lonely. And I know now how people feel toward my mother, and it hurts me—it all hurts me. But I'm going to stay and help her"— She paused to recover her voice. "And you do seem different. I—I trust you!"

"I'm glad you understand me, and you will let me know if I can help you, won't you?"

"Yes," she answered simply.

"Good night," he said, extending his hand.

They went in with such telltale faces that even Redfield wondered what had passed between them.

Excusing himself almost at once, Cavanagh left the room, and when he looked in a few moments later he was clothed in the ranger's dusty green uniform, booted and spurred for his long, hard ride. Mrs. Redfield followed him into the hall and out on the doorstone to say: "Ross, you must be careful. This girl is very alluring in herself, but her mother, you know, is impossible."

"You're needlessly alarmed, as usual," he smilingly replied. "She interests me, that's patent. But beyond that, why, nonsense! Good night."

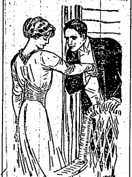
Nevertheless, despite his protestations, he went away up the trail with his mind so filled with Lee Virginia's appealing face and form that he would certainly have ridden over a precipice had it not been for his experienced pony, which had fortunately but one aim, and that was to cross the range safely and to reach the home pasture at the earliest moment.

Left alone, Lee Virginia thought over her past. She was not entirely without experience as regards respectful courtship. Her life in the east had brought her to know a number of attractive lads and a few men, but none of these had become more than a good companion or friend, and, though she wrote to one or two of these youths letters of the utmost friendliness, there was no passion in them, and she felt as yet the sting of nothing more intense in her liking for Cavanagh. But he meant more to her now that she was lonely and beleaguered.

That he had ridden all that long, rough way merely to see her she was not vain enough to believe, but she had nevertheless something of every woman's secret belief in her individual charm. Cavanagh had shown a flattering interest in her, and his wish to be her protector filled her with joy and confidence. [illegible]

She heard a good deal more about this particular forest ranger next morning at breakfast. "He is throwing himself away," Mrs. Redfield passionately declared. "Think of a man of Ross' refinement living in a mountain shack miles from anybody, watching poachers, marking trees and cooking his own food! It's a shameful waste of genius."

"That's as you look at it, my dear," responded Redfield. "Ross is the guardian of an immense treasure chest which belongs to the nation. Furthermore, he is quite certain, as I am, that this forest service is the policy of the future and that it offers fine chances for promotion, and then, finally, he likes it."



THE TOUCH OF IT MADE FURTHER SPEECH IMPOSSIBLE.

"That is all well enough for a young man, but Ross is at least thirty-five and should be thinking of settling down. I can't understand his point of view."

"My dear, you have never seen the procession of the seasons from such a point of view as that which he enjoys."

Redfield looked at Lee with comic blankness. "Mrs. Redfield is hopelessly urban. As the wife of a forest supervisor she cares more for pavements and tramcars than for the most splendid mountain park."

"I most certainly do," his wife vigorously agreed, "and if I had my way we should be living in London."

"Listen to that! She's ten times more English than Mrs. Enderby."

"I'm not, but I long for the civilized instead of the wild. I like comfort and society."

"So do I," returned he.

"Yes; the comfort of an easy chair on the porch and the society of your forest rangers. This ranch life is all very well for a summer outing, but to be tied down here all the year round is to be denied one's birthright as a modern."

All this more or less cheerful complaint expressed the minds of many others who live amid these superb scenes. When autumn comes, when the sky is gray and the peaks are hid in mist, they long for the music, the lights, the comfort of the city. But when the April sun begins to go down in a smother of crimson and flame and the mountains loom with epic dignity, or when at dawn the air is like some divine flood descending from the unstained mysterious heights, then the dweller in the foothills cries out: "How fortunate we are! Here are health and happiness! Here poverty is unknown!"

Mrs. Redfield was becoming more and more interested in Virginia, who had not merely the malodorous reputation of her mother to contend with, but the memory of a traitorous sire to live down, and when the girl went to her room to pack her bag the wife turned to her husband and said:

"Ross is terribly smitten with her."

Redfield coughed uneasily. "I hope not. Of course he admires her, as any man must. She's physically attractive, very attractive, and, besides, Ross is as susceptible as a cowpuncher. He was deeply impressed the first time he saw her; I could see that."

"I didn't like his going out on the veranda with her last night," continued Mrs. Redfield, "and when they came in her eyes and color indicated that he'd been saying something exciting to her. Hugh, Ross Cavanagh must not get involved with that girl. It's your duty as his superior to warn him."

"He's fully grown, my dear, and a bit dictatorial on his own part. I'm a trifle timid about cutting in on his private affairs."

"Then I'll do it. Marriage with a girl like that is out of the question. Think what his sisters would say!"

Redfield smiled a bit satirically. "To the outsider a forest ranger at $900 a year and find himself and horses is not what you may call a brilliant catch."

"Oh, well, the outsider is no judge! Ross Cavanagh is a gentleman, and, besides, he's sure to be promoted. I acknowledge the girl's charms, and I don't understand it. When I think of her objectively as Lize Wetherford's girl I wonder at her being in my house. When I see her I want her to stay with me. I want to hug her."

"Perhaps we've been unjust to Lize all along," suggested Redfield. "She has remained faithful to Ed Wetherford's memory all these years—that is conceded. Doesn't that argue some unusual quality? How many women do we know who are capable of such loyalty? Come, now! Lize is a rough piece of goods, I'll admit, and her lunch counter was a public nuisance, but she had the courage to send her girl away to be educated, denying herself the joy of seeing her develop by her side. We mustn't permit our prejudices to run away with us."

The girl's return put a stop to the discussion, which could end in nothing but confusion anyway.

CHAPTER IX.

THE DOCTOR SEES LIZE.

Lee Virginia said goodby to Mrs. Redfield with grateful appreciation of her kindness, and especially of her invitation to come again, and the tears in her eyes profoundly affected the older woman, who with a friendliness which [illegible] something more than politeness, invited her to come again. "Whenever Roaring Fork gets on your nerves we'll be very glad to rescue you," she said in parting.

Hugh Redfield the girl thoroughly understood and loved, he was so simple hearted and so loyal. On the way to the office he said to Lee, "I will talk to the doctor if you like."

"I wish you would," she responded fervently.

She remained in the machine while he went in, and as she sat there a train passed on its downward eastward run, and a feeling of loneliness, of helplessness, filled her heart. Now that she was within sight of the railway the call of the east, the temptation to escape all her discomforts, was almost great enough to carry her away, but into her mind came the thought of the ranger riding his solitary way, and she turned her face to her own duties once more, comforted by the words of praise he had spoken and by the blaze of admiration in his eyes.

"You'd better sit behind, doctor," said Redfield. "I shall be very busy on this trip."

"Very well," replied the other, "if Miss Wetherford remains beside me; otherwise I shall rebel."

He began by asking a few questions about her mother's way of life, but as Lee was not very explicit he became impersonal and talked of whatsoever came into his mind—motorcars, irrigation, hunting, flowers, anything at all—and the girl had nothing to do but to utter an occasional phrase to show that she was listening. It was all rather depressing to her, for she could not understand how a man so garrulous could be a good physician. She was quite sure her mother would not treat him with the slightest respect.

After all, he talked well. His stream of conversation shortened the way for her. Soon they were rolling quietly up the street to the door of the Wetherford House.

They found Lize on duty behind the counter, as usual. Her face was dejected, her eyes dull, but as she caught sight of the strange little man she cried out, "Why didn't you bring me a man, Reddy?"

"Hush, mother!" cautioned Lee. "This is the famous eastern physician."

"You can't be famous for your beauty; you must be brainy," she remarked to herself in the stranger's hearing.

Redfield presented "Dr. Fessenden of Omaha."

She started again on contemptuous ways, but was stopped by the little man. "Get down out of that chair!" he commanded. "My time is money!"

Lize flushed with surprise and anger, but obeyed, and Lee Virginia, secretly delighted with the physician's imperative manner, led the way into the lodging house. "I'll look after the cash, mother," she said. "Don't worry."

"I'm not worrying," she replied. "But what does that little whelp mean by talking to me like that? I'll swat him one if he isn't careful!"

"It's his way. Please don't anger him. You need his help."

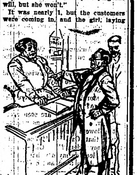
The doctor interfered. "Now, madam, strip and let's see what's the matter with you," whereupon he laid off his coat and opened his box of instruments.

Lee fled, and Redfield, who had remained standing beside the counter, could not repress a smile. "She's caught a tartar this time."

"Poor mother! How dreadfully ill she looks today! I hope the doctor will order her to rest."

"But will she obey? I've argued that with her. She keeps saying she will, but she won't."

It was nearly 1, but the customers were coming in, and the girl, laying aside her hat and veil, took her seat at the cash register, while Redfield went out to put his machine in order for the return trip. She realized that she was now at close hand grapple with life.



"GET DOWN OUT OF THAT CHAIR!"

Her glowing cheeks, her pretty dress made her a shining mark, and the men began at once to improve their opportunity by asking, "Where's Lize?" And this embarrassed her, for the reason that she did not care to go into the cause of her mother's temporary absence.

Perceiving her nervousness, Neill Ballard raised loud outcry over a mistake she made in returning change, and this so confused and angered her that her eyes misted with tears, and she blundered sadly with the next customer. His delight in her discomfiture, his words, his grin, became unendurable, and in a flush of rage and despair she sprang to her feet and left them to make triumphant exit. "I got her rattled," he roared as he went out. "She'll remember me."

Seedless—Fibreless—Juicy and Sweet—A Perfect Fruit

Until you have tasted a luscious "Sunkist" orange, you cannot begin to appreciate the excellence of oranges that are properly grown, rigidly inspected, carefully packed and swiftly transported. Serve "Sunkists" on your table tomorrow morning and learn the superiority of tree-ripened, fibreless, seedless, solid and sound oranges over the commonplace kind. "Sunkist" oranges are so nearly all food that they are much the cheapest kind to buy.

"Sunkist" oranges are thin-skinned and are hand-picked. The "Sunkist" orange is a firm, solid fruit. Ask your dealer for the "Sunkist" kind and make sure that each orange you get is packed in a tissue paper wrapper labeled "Sunkist." For these wrappers are valuable.

OFFICIAL PAPER OF THE CITY

"Our greatest glory is not in never failing and rising every time we fall.

Minnesota is not behind in "investigations" which seem so very popular every where, just now we have a committee investigating the Red Wing training school, which evidently needs reform, and another investigating State Engineer Ralph who may or may not need white-washing.

When one sees the headlines: Troops Guard Mining Camp--RegularTroops After Marauders—Old Battle ship Torn by Shells and all on onepage of a daily news-paper we see no need for a war to keep our soldiers employed and a constant need for soldiers, war or no war.

TheGt. Northern Railroad is reported to have orderd 10.000 tons of steel rails to be used in improving their roads the coming season a new road bed with new rails and ties, new cars and engines and a few new depots on our "Great" Northern road thru this and neighboring towns would improve their usefulness very considerably.

Whoever permits any person under the age of 21 years to be or remain in any dancehouse, concert saloon, place where intoxicating liquors are sold or given away, or any place of entertainment injurious to the morals, owned, kept or managed by him in whole or in part, or shall permit any boy under he age of 12 years to play any game of skill or chance in any such place shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and be punished by a fine of not less than $25.—Sec. 4936, Revised Laws, 1905.

That is the law of this state.

It does not say that girls of 16 or 17 shall be excluded unless they are attended by male escorts or if they are attended by male escorts.

It says that persons under 21—whether boys or girls—"shall not be permitted to be or remain in any dance hall".

"The Gladiator" shown at the Auditorium Tuesday night deserved a more cordial reception by our citizens than was accorded it. It was too small a house by far.

On Wednesday and Thursday evenings, when the same company played "The Three Musketeers" and "Faust" they had a better attendance, though much was yet to be dehis character portrayals his handlsired. Sandford Dadge excels in ing of the various parts proved him no amatuer.

His handling of the various characters prove him a versatile actor indeed. As the "Gladiator" he was splendid, as "D'Artagnan" he proved an ideal muskateer as "Sylock" a veritable Jew but as "Mephisto" his skill as an actor was most apparent.

Mr. Dodge is supported by a most excellent company and their scenery and costumes are rarely equalled by any traveling troupe when Mr. Dodge revisits our city he will doubtless meet with greater financial success as he surely deserves. The management is to be congratulated on having such a company here.

MALT AND THE BLIND PIGGER.

The drink known as "malt" is merely a convenient subterfuge provided by the brewers for the benefit of the blind pigs. It is supposed to be a drink brewed from malt in which the proportion of alcohol is so small that it is non-intoxicating. Practically, however, the dividing line between malt and beer is exceedingly hard to distinguish. The two look alike, smell alike and taste alike. Thus malt is the blind pigger's best friend. He sells beer under the guise of malt and escapes the law's penalties by slipping through its meshes.

Senator Hanson has offered a bill in the Legislature which is designed to put malt where it belongs—in the licensed saloons. If the measure becomes a law, it will not be legel to sell malt in any other than a licensed drinking place. Dispensers of soft drinks will not be permitted to sell it, but that will be no deprivation to those who are honest in their business. No one asks for malt except those who want to get a drink as close to beer as it possible. The bill is aimed at the blind pig and ought to be passed, if it can be so framed as not to interfere with legitimate trade in malt liquors in cases. --Minneapolis Journal.

The so-called Telephone Bill now before the Legislature ought to pass and we are glad to learn that our representative, D. P. O'Neill, is pledged for the bill. The home people will endorse his position generaly The provisions of this measure are in line with recent legislation on other public utilities and why what is sauce for the goose should not be sauce for the gander we cannot see. What would we think of the man in our day who should urge the abolition of our railway and ware-house commission; or advocates no state or national control of railways? We would be justified in considering him an enemy of the people. If, then, it is wholesome to have supervision and laws and checks on the railway companies it is equally wholesome that we have them for that other body controling a public utility, the telephone companies. The various companies are rivals an dthey are jealous of each other and in their opposition to each other they only too frequently forget or disregard their duties to the public. We need laws to compel them to do justice by the public and we need a commission to see to the enforcement of these laws. Let the bill pass and let the people have their conveniences, and woe, to the man that shall say the m"nay."

NEW SOLUM.

* * * * * * * * * *

The time will soon be present when we will say "Good-by" to Jack Frost as he will depart for a journey to his old home, "The North Pole."

We will now correct the mistake and misprint in our report of last week. Which should have been, P. "the get around lad" entertained his company by stepping the pig of 1911, it is also called the Minneapolis tip-toe-pig. In place of P. "the get around lad" entertained his company by stepping pig of 1911.

The Young Peoples Society will meet at Gust Nakken's next Friday evening March the 24th.

I will now call attention to the New Solum Echo reporter. In her outrageous fiction of last week, she states that the reporter of the New Solum News announced in a previous issue of the Press, regarding an auction sale, 3 miles northeast of Viking. We understand this, that she is trying to the level best of her ability to accuse the New Solum correspondent, of being the composer of the aforesaid auction sale. But here you, Miss Reporter are badly mistaken. I can affirm that I have never written nor feigned anything of that sort. We will advice the New Solum Echoe reporter to go and find out for sure who the culprit is of that auction sale story. And not address the "curtain lecture" before you are sure, you know who the culprit is.

Mrs. Dan Johnson alled at Thorson's last Saturday.

A social bunch played pig at Broten's Saturday evening and all present reported a good time, but somebody was in such a hurry on account of the snow storm.

August Anderson and Oscar Sebjonson called on the Sandridge folks Sunday.

Tennes Thoreson is sawing wood for Masbeck these days.

Pete Nelson called at Broten's Wednesday morning. How were the roads Pete?

School Notes.

The Seniors entertained the Juniors and the high school faculty last Friday evening at the Odd fellows hall. The room was beautifully decorated and nearly all the 75 persons present were costumed to represent some historical or well known character. Refreshments, games and a jolly crowd made the hours spin by like minutes, and though the party was prolonged to a late hour still it was considered all too brief.

A two days' institute for farmers and pure seed corn contest are being held this week at the Lincoln gymnasium. Several institute workers from the college of agriculture are in charge and Henry Pops, President of the Upper Minnesota Corn Growers Association, is looking after the corn contest. This meeting closes the series of farmers' convention which have been presented by the department of agriculture of the local high school. The corn awards will be announced next week.

State high school examinations are being held this week for the grammar grades in the Washington building. Only the common subjects are being written on this week.

The scholars and teachers were shocked Monday morning on hearing that little Marjorie Miller of Miss Thompson's room in the Washington school had passed away the preceding Saturday evening. She was a studious child of gentle nature and had endeared herself to all those with whom she had come in contact. SCHOOL NOTES extends the sympathy of the teachers and students to the bereaved relatives.

One of the most significant actions ever taken by the local schools is contained in the simple statement, that the young ladies of the graduating class, at the suggestion of the superintendent, unanimously decided to provide but one plain white dress for both class night exercises and graduation night. This innovation is no reflection on former classes, but is simply an indication of wise and necessary progress in matters pretaining to education. These young ladies deserve great credit for so unanimous a choice in favor of simplicity and economy and for the sacrifice of fond hopes of the possession of costly gowns, which ordinarily are a part of graduation. It is hoped this departure will meet with the approval of sensible people in the city and establish a precedent for all future graduates of this institution.

The North Star College basket bal team of Warren will play the Lincoln team at the high school gymnasium on Friday evening. A preliminary game between the Juniors and the Commerical Normals will also take place. These contests will be fast ones and all should see them.

If Canada Had Been Ceded to Us.

But for the wisdom of George Washington and Benjamin Franklin England would have ceded Canada to us at the close of the Revolutionary war Washington and Franklin knew that if Canada had been ceded to the colonies France, from which Canada had been wrested some twenty years earlier, would have demanded that country as indemnity for the expense she was put to in the war for our independence. With the French flag restored in Canada it would have been a matter of a very short time when we would have been at war with France and to save us from defeat there is nothing more certain than that we would have appealed to England. The aid would have come, and come swift and irresistible, and the chances are we would have returned to our allegiance to the crown of England, for it was years between the treaty of peace and the formation of the Union, plenty of time to get into a quarrel with France over some dispute as to boundary or fishing.—Washington Post.

Why Gold Is a Precious Metal.

Pure or fine gold will stand any test it may be put to in comparison with other metals. It can be rolled or hammered, extending it in any direction until it becomes transparent. It can also be drawn into a thread as fine as human hair. It melts at about 2,000 degrees F., and, though it may be kept in a molten state for an indefinite time, it loses none of its weight, even should the heat be increased. The color is unaffected by air, water or heat and will stand any test of oxidation No simple acid will dissolve or attack pure gold. In conjunction with silver gold is the first metal with which man became acquainted and is the most valuable by reason of the vast number of uses to which it is put. It is found in almost every country in a metallic state and nearly always in crystals. The old Egyptian symbol for gold signified divinity and perfection. The chemical term used today is aurum.—New York Press.

Pottery Work In China.

The Chinese are pioneers in the art of pottery, the rapidity with which they construct pots being marvelous. One man will mold two ten-inch pots in three minutes. The potter's wheel is the essential part of the equipment. The workman's left hand is gently thrust into the center of the clay, while his right hand is slightly pressing on the outside to keep the whole together, but it is from the inside that most of the shaping is done. Meanwhile the "wheel" is made to turn more quickly. Then, by keeping both hands opposite each other—i. e., one inside and one outside—together moving slowly up from the wheel, pressure by both hands is exerted, and the shapeless mass of clay assumes the shape of a pot with astonishing rapidity. A thin piece of wood is used to flatten the rim, and usually the same piece is used to measure the pot to see if it is the correct size.

Saucers and Finger Bowls.

Drinking from the saucer was not a social solecism seventy-five years ago. In fact, sets of old china may still be found intact that include dainty tabloids upon which the cup was to rest while the contents, taken from the saucer, were imbibed and from the attending noise apparently almost inhaled by the drinker. One spoon was regarded as sufficient for all courses of food as well as drink, and the overworked knife did duty both for cutting and carrying. As for finger bowls, did not the late Senator Tom Benton confide to his diary that his first experience with them was at a dinner given by President Van Buren? "The president," said he, "dipped his fingers daintily in the bowl and dried them upon his napkin, but I rolled up my sleeves and took a good old fashioned wash."—Boston Transcript.

Let Him Stay as He Was.

A well known veterinary surgeon of Lemberg, Austria, was recently called to the telephone when this conversation followed:

"Hello! Is this Dr. N.?"

"Yes. What do you wish?"

"My horse is standing stock still on his hind legs, with his forefeet in the air and nothing can make him come down on all fours. Did you ever hear of such a queer case? What shall I do about it?"

"The case is extraordinary," replied the astonished doctor. "I can give no opinion without seeing the animal. Where do you live?"

"Carl-Ludwig strasse."

"And your name?"

"Sobieski."

Here the doctor rang off and swore softly at the wag who had fooled him. The horse in question was the bronze animal which upholds upon its back the fine equestrian statue of John Sobieski, king of Poland, which ornaments the Carl-Ludwig street in Lemberg.

Making the Money Last.

Rosa Bonheur used to say that her youth was one of great poverty. Then she would add some droll stories about the family method of regulating its finance. The studio was a collection of odds and ends, and M. Bonheur knew how to turn that disorder to account. When he received money for his work he would take a handful of coin and throw it at random about the room. Then in times of stress, when there was apparently not a farthing left in the house, the entire family would set to work searching in nooks and corners. Sometimes they would find a five franc piece, and that warded off starvation. To perfect herself in her study of animals young Rosa spent days in a slaughter house. The men were perplexed at seeing a young woman there and sometimes made it disagreeable for her, but good M. Emile, a butcher of great strength, announced that whosoever annoyed her would have to reckon with him. Then she was enabled to work undisturbed.

THE YOUNG BRIDE'S FIRST DISCOVERY.

Their wedding tour had ended, and they entered their new home to settle down to what they hoped to be one long uninterrupted blissful honeymoon.

But, alas! the young bride's troubles soon began, when she tried to reduce the cost of living with cheap big can baking powders.

She soon discovered that all she got was a lot for her money, and it was not all baking powder, for the bulk of it was cheap materials which had no leavening power. Such powders will not make light, wholesome food. And because of the absence of leavening gas, it requires from two to three times as much to raise cakes or biscuits as it does of Calumet Baking Powder.

Thus, eventually, the actual cost to you, of cheap baking powders, is more than Calumet would be.

Cheap baking powders often leave the bread bleached and acid, sometimes yellow and alkaline, and often unpalatable. They are not always of uniform strength an dquality.

Now the bride buys Calumet—the perfectly wholesome baking powder, moderate in price, and always uniform and reliable. Calumet keeps indefinitely, makes cooking easy, and is certainly the most economical after all.

"TIL SAETER" A SUCCESS.

The Scandinavian play, "Til Saeter" given at the Auditorium last Friday evening proved a success. The play was given under the auspices of the Brage Chorus and the proceeds will go toward defraying the expenses of the Sangefest to be held here next June. But the play was a success not only as a money maker but also a success as an entertainment. All present with one accord pronounce it a rare treat.

Besides the play, some exquisite musical numbers were sandwiched in between acts, by the Chorus, Mrs. G. Halvorson, Mr. and Mrs. A. Bjerkhoel, Mr. L. O. Lasseson, and others.

ANTI-TUBERCULOSIS LEGISLATION.

Probably within a week the fate of the bill (H. F. 749) establishing a state sanatorium for all stages of the disease in each congressional district will be decided in the House. The bill is on general orders but there are over 100 bills ahead of it. A duplicate bill has been introduced in the Senate by the Senate Public Health & Pure Food Committee as S. F. 602. A duplicate of House File 671 appropriating a small sum for the immediate expenses of the State Tuberculosis Commission has also been introduced in the Senate as S. F. 525. Unless this bill passes the work of caring for the consumptives must wait a full year or until the tax levy asked for to build the institutions with will become available, next March.

The school exhibit bill, H. F. 736 is based on the assumption that the best machinery through which to educate the rural population of this state who have been largely neglected so far in the anti-tuberculosis campaign is the county school organization. This organization reaches the remotest districts.

Many of the county superintendents are already much interested and will do everything they can to spread information in their territory. Hence with the hearty approval of the State Department of Public Instruction and the State Board of Health the Anti-tuberculosis Association is asking the legislature to appropriate $10,000 to the State Board of Health with which to place 10 or more small compact hand portable exhibits in the hands of each county superintendent to be circulated through the schools of the county. The plan is to have a set of exhibits for each county, each of which is different so that the schools may have a change every so often. This plan would add to the interest and make possible dissemination of a larger amount of information than could be given in one small permanent exhibit.

How I Became an Archaeologist

By ARNOLD L. TINKAM

Copyright by American Press Association, 1911.

When I was a boy and studied Latin I read stories about ancient Rome that gave me an unconquerable desire to see the Eternal City. I wished to visit the chasm, or at least the place where it was, into which Quintus Curtius leaped on horseback, the remaining pillars of the temple erected to the two beautiful strangers, Castor and Pollux, who watered their horses in the forum after the battle of Lake Regillus, and the bridge that Horatius defended so valiantly. There was no prospect of my ever visiting Italy, for I had not the means even to take me to college.

But I was a good deal of a dreamer, and, my fancy getting fixed on my object, I couldn't turn it upon anything else. The only practical result was a resolve to "save up," as children put it, with a view to getting enough money to take me to Rome, keep me there long enough to get a hurried view of what I wished to see and bring me back to America.

By the time I was eighteen years old I had acquired this amount. I suppose I should have spent it in starting me upon a college education, but I did not. I bought a second class ticket on a ship crossing the Atlantic and proceeding through the Mediterranean to Naples. I remained at Naples long enough to visit Pompeii, then went by rail to Rome.

At first I was disappointed in getting into a modern commercial city, but when I struck some of the landmarks of ancient Rome—the Pantheon, the arches of Constantine and Titus, the Coliseum—I was not long in forgetting the modern in my rapture over the ancient. When I had exhausted Rome itself I was seized with a desire to visit its environs. I had read of the Campagna as it was when covered with farms and villas.

But by the time I had seen Rome itself my money was all gone. I hadn't enough even to buy a return trip ticket to America. I was stranded in a foreign country. What could I do? What did I do? I followed the genius of archaeology that was strong within me. Reading a notice in a newspaper that an excavating party was to make a search for the ruins of a certain villa some fifty miles from the city, I hired myself as a digger to the archaeologist in charge, went with him and dug with the rest. In his reading he had hit upon a description of the site, but could only confirm his views by burrowing in the ground. In other words, he must hunt for that for which he was looking.

We dug three days, at the end of which time my employer gave up the search. During this time I put in my spade here and there on my own account, with no result. When the party went back to Rome I asked for my pay, a few lira, and they returned without me. I had seen a stone projecting from the soil at some distance from where we were digging that seemed to me to have been artificially shaped, and I wished to investigate it.

As soon as the party were gone I began to dig about this stone. I found that it rested on another, to which it was fixed by mortar. This in turn rested on another. Then I came to a wall. I followed the wall for a dozen feet and came to an angle. The top of the wall was five or six feet from the surface, and I was not likely to find anything of value at a less depth. I dug all day, and as the evening was coming on, some ten feet below the surface, my spade struck something hard. I shuddered, for by this time I knew that I was liable to ruin a treasure. These villas were ornamented with statues—some of them very beautiful—and every year they are found. I had with me a scoop and, throwin down my spade, began to dig ab the hard substance with the sm implement. It was round. In minutes I uncovered a marble b

ROOSEVELT DAM IS DEDICATED

Former President Principal Figure at Celebration.

ONE OF LARGEST IN WORLD

Reclamation Project Has Cost Nine Millions of Dollars and Several More Millions Are Needed.

Phoenix, Ariz., March 19.—The formal dedication of the great dam named after former President Roosevelt occurred in the presence of the colonel, who was the principal figure in the celebration of the completion of the leading feature of the Salt river reclamation project, which has cost the government about $9,000,000 and which will probably cost $2,000,000 more to complete.

The Roosevelt dam reclamation project is situated a half mile below the confluence of Tonto creek and upper Salt river, at the head of a canyon through which Salt river flows for many miles. It is the most imposing feature of the Salt river project, the first one undertaken by the United States reclamation service under the provisions of the reclamation act, approved by President Roosevelt June 17, 1902, and after whom the town at the dam site is named. It is seventy-six miles east of Phoenix, which is situated in the center of a valley of which 240,000 acres is signed to the Salt River Valley Water Users' association. This corporation represents the farmers in their dealings with the government, guaranteeing payment of the construction cost of the project.

Creates Immense Reservoir.

The dam creates a reservoir extending twelve miles up Tonto creek and thirteen miles up Salt river nearly to what is known as the intake dam, 400 feet long. The capacity of the reservoir is 1,284,204 acre feet, the largest artificial lake in the world. Though the dam is not the largest in the world, it is among the largest. The foundation rests on bed rock forty feet below river level.

It is 235 feet long, between the canyon walls, and 170 feet wide. From the river level to the crest of the spillways at either end of the dam the height is 220 feet, that being the greatest depth of storage possible. The spillways are bridged and over the bridges and the top of the dam runs the only highway in that region connecting the mountain country on the north and south sides of Salt river. This roadway is twenty feet above the highest storage and a coping four feet high protects the roadway. From the bottom of the foundation to the top of the coping is 284 feet.

The dam is curved, arching up stream, and at the top is 680 feet long and sixteen feet wide. The spillways at either end are 200 feet wide, so the length, inclusive of the bridges over the spillways, is 1,080 feet.

GAYNOR DENOUNCES STRIKE

Says District Attorney Should Take Charge of Situation.

New York, March 21.—The district attorney ought to take charge of the situation precipitated by the strike of drivers employed by the Adams, Wells-Fargo and United States Express companies, in the opinion of Mayor Gaynor, expressed in a letter to General Organizer William H. Ashton of the strikers, commending his opposition to the calling of a general strike.

"It may well be a criminal offense to conspire to scare anybody in any such way as this," the mayor writes. "The [illegible] frivolous reasons and unjustified and bound to fail after causing commerce and the community great loss and trouble, thereby injuring the cause of labor."

No Practical Knowledge.

Queer Lawsuit.

Perhaps the most remarkable suit ever brought is on the records of the court of the exchequer in England. It was filed on Oct. 3, 1725, and it sets forth very clearly that John Everit and Joseph Williams were highway robbers. In its succinct legal phrases the complaint says that the men formed a partnership for the purpose of carrying on business as highwaymen. It was mighty profitable, as was shown by the fact that Everit sued Williams for the equivalent of $5,000, "being for moneys wrongfully appropriated to defendant's private purse." This was the amount in dispute after the partnership had lasted only a year. Then Everit claimed that he discovered that his partner had not made a fair division of the spoils. The action was adjudged to be a gross contempt of court, and the plaintiff was ordered to pay all costs, while the solicitors who served the writ were fined. One of the solicitors, a man named Wreathcock, refused to pay the fine and was sent to prison for six months. Both plaintiff and defendant to the action were subsequently hanged, one at Tyburn and the other at Maidstone.

Spoke Their Minds.

The original woman's rights woman of the modern era, according to a contributor to the Paris Figaro, was Olympe de Gonges, a Frenchwoman who was beheaded, but not before she had wittily pointed out the gulf, fixed by custom, between woman's inherent and her civic rights. In 1791, in a manifesto which had no precedent whatever and which contained an article which has kept suffragists going ever since, the intrepid Olympe de Gonges declared, "Woman has the right to mount the scaffold; she should also have the right to mount the tribune."

Another way of expressing the same idea is credited to Mme. Condorcet. It is said that Bonaparte when consul remarked to Mme. Condorcet:

"I don't like to have women mix up in politics."

"In a country where their heads are cut off," the wife of the philosopher returned without hesitation, "it is natural that they should want to know the reason why."

Stopping a Steamship.

M. Bertin, chief engineer of naval construction in the French navy, figured out from elaborate calculations in how short a distance a steamship can stop. He demonstrates that a 50,000 ton transatlantic liner, going twenty-nine knots an hour, simply by stopping the engines will come to a stop in one hour and thirteen minutes and will in that time have traveled 4.78 statute miles. The same vessel with reciprocating engines, if these be reversed, will stop in twice its own length and if the engines be turbines in four times its own length. These theoretical calculations are verified by actual experiment. The French minister of marine made the test with some torpedo boats and has on several occasions stopped one by reversing its engine to 60.6 yards and when the engines were of the turbine type in 273.4 yards.—New York World.

Obeyed the Judge.

A little colored girl, deeply insulted by her playmate, who had pushed her "off'n de stoop," took her case before the justice of the peace. He inquired into the circumstances and said, turning to the injured one, "The plaintiff is allowed to ask the defendant a question in regard to the assault."

"Wha's dat yo' say, sah?"

"I say that you may ask the defendant a question."

"Wha'-that' Ah ask her, sah?"

"Any question you like."

The child studied the floor a moment; then, with the politest of smiles, she inquired, "Sally, am yo' mammy well?"—Everybody's.

JOHN B. M'DONALD.

Builder of New York Subway Passes Away in That City.

DEATH DUE TO OVERWORK

New York, March 18.—"Wall street has no use for the contractor the moment the dint is off his shovel."

This statement made by John B. McDonald, the man who built the New York subway, was recalled when it was announced that he had died following a general breakdown caused by overwork.

It summed up, in his opinion, the difference between the financier and the worker.

His greater work was the subway and he had hoped always to operate it, but was frozen out soon after it was opened by certain financiers.

TEN MEN INDICTED BY GRAND JURY

Extensive Land Fraud Conspiracy Is Alleged.

Washington, March 18.—"Probably the most extensive land fraud in the history of the interior department," was the way Commissioner of the Land Office Fred Dennett described the cases against A. C. Frost of Chicago and nine other men who were indicted by the federal grand jury.

The men are charged with not only having planned to steal coal lands worth more than $10,000,000, but to build a railroad connecting the coal fields with Alaskan markets and shipping ports and to float a multi-million dollar stock company.

Frost, Dennett said, was the originator of the scheme. Without money himself, he is charged with having persuaded numerous wealthy men to supply him with millions of capital. The railroad Frost planned was actually started, it was stated, but abandoned when the land office held up the entries.

Both United States and Canadian capitalists are said to have been involved in the attempted frauds.

NEGRO EDUCATOR ASSAULTED

Booker T. Washington Severely Beaten in New York City.

New York, March 21.—Dr. Booker T. Washington was not able to appear in court because of the injuries he received Sunday night, according to the statement of his attorney, and the hearing of the charge against Albert Ulrich, the carpenter arrested on his complaint of felonious assault, was postponed for a day. Ulrich was released on bail.

Ulrich, a white man, maintains that he was acting within his rights when he struck the negro educator with a club and pursued him for several blocks before a policeman appeared. Ignorant of the negro's identity, he declared that his wife had complained to him of a negro she had met in the hallway of their flat house in West Sixty-third street.

Mr. Washington, who was sent to Flower hospital, where sixteen stitches were taken in his scalp, asserted that his mission to that neighborhood was perfectly legitimate and that he had been made the innocent victim of a most atrocious assault.

ENGLISH BANKER IS SUICIDE

Sensation Caused in London by Death of R. F. Carnegie.

London, March 18.—A sensation has been caused in financial circles by the suicide of R. F. Carnegie, manager of the Lombard street branch of Parr's bank, limited, who shot himself at his residence. The affairs of the institution are said to be in perfect order.

The authorized capital is $62,500,000. For years it has paid a dividend of 10 per cent per annum.

Duncan Smoked in Church.

Sir Walter Scott, in his "Heart of Midlothian" refers to one Duncan of Knockdunder, an important personage, who smoked during the whole of the sermon from an iron pipe tobacco borrowed from other worshipers. "We are told that at the end of the discourse he knocked the ashes out of his pipe, replaced it in his sporran, returned the tobacco pouch to its owner, and joined in the prayer with decency and attention."

COMPLIMENTARY BYRAN BANQUET

About Thirteen Hundred Persons Attend Dollar Dinner.

LEADERS PRAISE NEBRASKAN

Promoters of Feast Made No Attempt to Conceal Fact That Function Was Intended as Denial of the Statement That Bryan Had Been Repudiated as Leader of Democratic Party in His Own State.

Lincoln, Neb., March 21.—Between twelve and thirteen hundred followers of W. J. Bryan attended the complimentary banquet tendered him by the Lincoln Bryan club. In point of attendance it brought together the largest crowd for a similar function held in Lincoln for many years and the presence of such recognized Democratic leaders as Champ Clark, the coming speaker of the national house of representatives; Governor Shafroth of Colorado, Senator Owen of Oklahoma, Senator Kern of Indiana and Senator Hitchcock of Nebraska gave it an interest and political importance more than statewide.

The promoters of the banquet, which took the form of a dollar dinner, made no attempt to conceal the fact that the function was in part intended as a denial of the statement made at times in Nebraska that Mr. Bryan had been repudiated as the leader of the party in his home state and in the addresses a number of the speakers emphasized their belief that the guest of honor was still to them the leader of Democracy, both in state and nation.

Dr. P. L. Hall, vice chairman of the Democratic national committee, was the toastmaster. The first speakers were Nebraska men, long devoted followers of Mr. Bryan. Two men on the programme for addresses, former Governor Shallenberger and W. H. Thompson of Grand Island, at the last moment sent regrets.

ASSESSMENTS NULL AND VOID

Milwaukee Official Held to Be Holding Office Illegally.

Milwaukee, March 21.—All special assessments made by the Socialist commissioner of public works, Harry E. Briggs, amounting to over $800,000, are probably illegal because of the decision of Judge Eschweiler in the circuit court that Briggs illegally holds a city office created illegally by the Socialistic administration.

In addition to this complication the purchasers of $160,000 in delinquent tax certificates will refuse to pay over the money advanced for taxes, thus further involving the administration, which is now worried by a scarcity of cash. To remedy this trouble the city council began anew the proceedings to change the form of the board of public works and hopes to complete the work in time to make the tax assessments legal.

Meanwhile the original case is pending in the supreme court.

KENYON MEN AGAIN FAIL

Try Vainly in Two Ways to Force More Than One Ballot.

Des Moines, March 21.—A strenuous fight was made on the floor of the joint assembly following the taking of the forty-fifth joint ballot for the election of United States senator, in which Judge Kenyon lacked but nine votes of election. Immediately after taking the ballot a motion was made by Kenyon supporters to take a second ballot. This was lost by a vote of 84 to 60. Another motion then was made by Senator Allen of Pocahontas, a Kenyon backer, that the joint assembly meet at 7 p. m. to ballot until a senator is elected. This motion was lost after a hot debate, by a vote of 62 to 82.

PLEDGE AGAINST ALCOHOL

Bill in Wisconsin Assembly to Require Students' Signatures.

Madison, Wis., March 21.—After reading in the papers of the prevalence of the drink habit among students at the University of Wisconsin, Assemblyman Hansen of Manitowoc, the "apostle of the harem skirt," introduced in the assembly a joint resolution calling upon the board of university regents to require hereafter that all male students sign a pledge of total abstinence. The measure was offered after finding of dissatisfaction with the proposed one mile dry zone around the university.

Hiccoughs Prove Fatal.

Minneapolis, March 21.—Hiccoughing continuously for ten days, with only momentary intervals of rest, William Currie, eighty-six years old, a well known real estate dealer, died from sheer exhaustion. In point of duration the attack of hiccoughs is considered remarkable by physicians who have investigated the case.

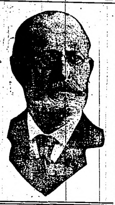
Army Engineer Says Opening of Lakes to Ocean Is Feasible.



MERELY MATTER OF MONEY

Opening of Great Lakes to Ocean for Large Ships.

Washington, March 18.—"Opening the Great Lakes to the ocean for deep water craft is merely a matter of money; there is no obstacle in the way that cannot be overcome," said General W. H. Bixby, chief engineer of the United States army.

"In the Welland canal it is a question of making the facilities larger. In the St. Lawrence river the enlargement of the numerous canals and locks would be impracticable, because canal navigation is too tedious to pay. But the rapids in that river can be overcome by means of a series of great dams which will transform those rapids into six or eight deep lakes through which a vessel ought to pass at practically full speed."

TUG SINKS DURING GALE ON LAKE ERIE

Seven Men Drowned Off Port of Cleveland.

Cleveland, March 17.—Eight men are believed to be drowned as the result of the terrific gale which swept Lake Erie. Of the eight believed to be dead seven are supposed to have drowned with the sinking of the fishing tug, Silver Spray, just outside the Cleveland breakwater, while Charles Cripps of Cleveland was swept overboard from the tug Effie B. and drowned. The crew of the Silver Spray that went down with her consisted of Captain James Purdy, Engineer Watts and Thomas Reeds of Edie; Edward Holmnes, Charles Brasso, Henry Anderson and an unknown cabin boy of Cleveland.

Flogging Petty Criminals.

Flogging, claimed by some to be a survival of barbarism in England, is given credit by others as being the most potent factor in ridding London of petty criminals and assuring public safety. Many criminals become so familiar with the prison routine as to lose all horror of it. In fact, life is so wretched for certain classes of undesirables in London that they would commit petty crimes as a means of gaining entrance to a prison were it not for the wholesome fear of floggings. The cat-o'-nine-tails used for the floggings has been deprived of its knots and is not laid on so strenuously as in the old days, while with young offenders the birch rod is brought into play. A physician is always on hand to stop the flogging should the culprit evince signs of fainting. Although the flogging punishment has thus been mitigated, it does not seem to have lost its effectiveness.—Popular Mechanics.

Might Spare a Few.

It is said that never was there a gentler critic than Dr. McClintock of Dickinson college. One day a young orator presented his speech for Dr. McClintock's approval. He evidently did not anticipate adverse criticism. He received it nevertheless, given in the doctor's gentle, humorous way, which never could offend.

"It's a good speech," he said, "but there is perhaps a little too much of a certain sort of rhetoric. For instance, I find in it two midnight owls, two midnight wolves, three American eagles and four unfurled banners. It seems to me that the supply exceeds the demand."

A Mighty Big Can.

An Irish harvester found himself in a small Scottish town. At the gas works he saw a gasometer for the first time in his life and stopped a countryman who was passing to ask, "What's that big round thing there standing on end?"

"Get out with you," said the Irishman. "You never saw a dinner can as big as that in your life."

TORTURED FOR 15 YEARS
by a cure-defying stomach trouble that baffled doctors, and resisted all remedies he tried, John W. Modders, of Moddersville, Mich., seemed doomed. He had to sell his farm and give up work. His neighbors said "he can't live much longer" "Whatever I ate distressed me," he wrote, "till I tried Electric Bitters, which worked such wonders for me that I can now eat things I could not take for years. Its surely a grand remedy for stomach trouble." Just as good for the liver and kidneys. Every bottle guaranteed. Only 50 cents at all Druggists.

TAFT EMPLOYS EXPERT STAFF

Gathering Data for Scientific Government Methods.

FORCE WILL BE INCREASED

Senatorial Waiting Rooms at Present the Scene of Great Business Activity, the Chief Executive Keeping in Close Touch With His Experts—Belief Prevails That Important New Office May Be Created.

Washington, March 21.—President Taft believes in scientific management and he proposes the United States government shall have some of it. The proof of this is at hand.

The president has turned the senatorial waiting rooms over to his scientific management experts in order that he might have his proposed revolution in the management of the government conducted under his own eye. In those rooms at the present time he has at work an expert in scientific management to whom he is paying $10,000 a year. To help him he has two expert accountants at $3,600, one at $3,000, one at $2,200, one at $2,000, one law clerk at $1,500 and four stenographers at $720 each.

This is only the beginning. Very soon he is going to employ an additional staff of experts to the number of about six, whom he hopes to get for $6,000 each, but for whom he will pay $8,000 if he can't get them for less. For these men he proposes to go into the competitive market and bid for them, as he finds there is no other way open to secure just the kind of talent he knows he must have.

It is suspected that a new office is to be created to be known as that of "the administrator." This officer will be a sort of combined purchasing agent, regulator and equalizer. He will be expected to know all things about all departments.

SECONDS TOSS UP SPONGE

McFarland Punishes Billy Ryan In Bout Stopped In Fourth Round.

Oswego, N. Y., March 21.—Packey McFarland of Chicago scored an easy victory over Billy Ryan of Syracuse before the Oswego City Athletic club here. Ryan was saved from a knockout in the fourth when his seconds threw a sponge into the ring.

The Chicago lightweight took things easy for two rounds but in the third followed Ryan about the ring, showering him with blows to the head and body. This round ended with Ryan bleeding from cuts on his face. He rallied for a moment in the fourth, but McFarland soon had him helpless and he was hanging on the ropes when the bout ended.

President Greatly Refreshed From Southern Trip.

Washington, March 21.—Greatly refreshed and prepared for strenuous executive activity before congress convenes in extraordinary session April 4 President Taft returned from his ten days' vacation at Augusta, Ga.

The president will take up immediately the work of preparing his message to congress resubmitting the Canadian reciprocity agreement. He expects to confer immediately with leaders of both parties regarding the work of the special session, it being his desire that the Canadian reciprocity agreement be ratified and the tariff board bill be passed.

DOCTOR CONTRACTS MALADY

Dangerously Ill With Disease He Was Combating.

New York, March 21.—Assisting in the fight to avert importation of spinal meningitis, which was discovered last week to be prevalent among Greek immigrants arriving here, Dr. Edward T. Ashley, one of the bacteriologists at the quarantine hospital in New York harbor, himself suddenly has contracted the dread disease.

It was learned from Dr. Alvah H. Doty, health officer of the port, that Ashley was seized with the malady, and is in a serious condition. Dr. Doty diagnosed the case as cerebro spinal meningitis.

Motorcycle Kills Child.

Waterloo, Ia., March 21.—Stanley Bruner, aged ten, died from injuries sustained when Henry Webster of Jonesville struck him with a motor cycle. Bruner was roller skating.

Held Bible and Rudder.

Some years ago Japan was neither so free nor so friendly with other nations as she is today. In those old days when a foreign ship entered the Japanese ports the captain was obliged to place his Bible and rudder in charge of the chief officer of the port and leave them there until he was ready to sail. Of course he wouldn't sail without either, and the Japs could easily keep tabs on the movements of all ships in their harbors.

The Seven Sleepers.

The seven sleepers of Ephesus, a favorite subject in medieval art, were seven Christians who to escape the persecution of Decius concealed themselves in a cave whose mouth was closed by their enemies. The cave was rediscovered 200 years afterward, when the sleepers awoke youthful and in perfect health.

Both Wrong.

"You have deceived me," she complained. "You gave me to understand that you were rich."

"Well, you deceived me, too," he replied. "You caused me to believe that you would be brave and cheerful if it ever became necessary for us to get along on a small income."—Judge.

ENTERS UPON ARDUOUS TASK

Mexican Finance Minister Trying to Arrange Peace.

NO PROPOSALS FROM REBELS

Senor Limantour Warns Mexicans That Danger of International Complications Increase.

Mexico City, March 21.—With a warning to all Mexicans that with every day the rebellion continues the danger of international complications increases, a plea to them to rally to the support of General Diaz, and a declaration that the government never can enter into peace negotiations with individuals in arms, Finance Minister Jose Yves Limantour entered upon the task of pacification which the world at least has set for him and upon the outcome of which the world is interested.

Mr. Limantour called upon the president at the national palace. The meeting was cordial in the extreme, the old time friends shaking one another by the hand and embracing repeatedly. Then followed a conference lasting more than an hour at which no other person was present. At its conclusion Senor Limantour said that only generalities were discussed.

Senor Limantour asserted that the statement that he was the bearer of conditions for the establishment of peace, placed in his hands by the Maderos in New York, was an absurdity.

Not the Answer He Expected.

Whitefield, whose dramatic appeals to his listeners were always a noteworthy part of his sermons, once preached to a body of seamen in New York. In the course of his sermon he introduced the following words:

"Well, my boys, we have a clear sky and are making fine headway over a smooth sea before a light breeze, and we shall soon lose sight of land. But what means this sudden lowering of the heavens and that dark cloud rising from the western horizon? Hark! Don't you hear the distant thunder? Don't you see those flashings of lightning? There is a storm gathering. Every man to his duty! How the waves rise and dash against the ship! The air is dark. The tempest rages! Our masts are gone! The ship is on her beam ends! What next?"

The hands of every sailor were gripping the pews in front of them, and a wild excitement was in their eyes. And when the preacher reached the climax of his dramatic speech they sprang to their feet in a body and shouted, "Take the longboat!"—New York Sun.

Tramps and Cuff Muzzlers.

The most curious article in the tramp's outfit bears an appropriately odd name—the "cuff muzzler." It consists of the leg of an old stocking cut up into short lengths and worn over the wrist like a thick mitten, and its object is to increase the circumference of the wrist to such an extent that a constable cannot easily slip a handcuff over it.

Indeed, a pair of "cuff muzzlers"—which are worn by none save veteran roadsters—make it very difficult for a constable alone and unaided to handcuff their wearer. Tramps' tools bear puzzling names. Particularly cryptic is "fiddle," the term for a big nail carried by the "spike ranger" or itinerant who goes from one casual ward to the next. Should he fall into the hands of the police it is used in "oakum worrying"—that is, separating the strands of hard rope.—Baltimore American.

Shark Soup.

In Ceylon there is a considerable trade in the oil of the white shark. The fins of the animal are very rich in gelatin and are used largely by the Chinese for making soup, of which they declare that the turtle soup so prized by epicures in this country is but a distant and feeble imitation.

Well Patched.

Secret Sorrows.

A Learned Russian Baby.

William Lyon Phelps tells this story about Robert Louis Stevenson as illustrating the cosmopolitanism of Russian character, which Professor Phelps says is unaccountable in a measure for the international effect and influence of Russian novels. Stevenson, writing from Mentone to his mother, Jan. 7, 1874, said: "We have two little Russian girls, with the youngest of whom, a little polyglot button of a three-year-old, I had the most laughable little scene at lunch today. She said something in Italian which made everybody laugh very much. After some examination she announced emphatically to the whole table in German that I was a madchen. This hasty conclusion as to my sex she was led afterward to revise, but her new opinion was announced in a language quite unknown to me and probably Russian. To complete the scroll of her accomplishments she said goodby to me in very commendable English." Three days later Stevenson added: "The little Russian kid is only two and a half. She speaks six languges."

"A Right and Lawful Rood."

An example of the old rough and ready methods of arriving at a measurement is the Elizabethan way of getting the "feet." Falentin Leigh, who wrote on surveying, records that after service on Sunday sixteen men were stopped at the church door, just as they happened to come out, and drawn up in line, left foot to left foot. The length thus obtained was taken as "a right and lawful rood to measure and survey the land with," and a sixteenth part of it as "a right and lawful foot." Although big and little men were thus roughly averaged against each other, the results naturally varied to some extent. Hence it is, as Shaw Sparrow notes in treating of this "rood" as the architectural "bay" which gives us the "bay window," that a bay is sometimes found to be rather less than sixteen feet of twelve inches.—London Chronicle.

The Shepherd and His Flock.

A certain good bishop was in Italy for his health, and while walking in the country one day he met a small girl who was tending some pigs. The animals were giving her a great deal of trouble, and the good bishop offered to stay and watch the ones that were grunting and rooting in a ditch while the little shepherdess went to catch two runaways that had strayed from the fold. When she came back the reverend gentleman stroked the unkempt curly head of the child and asked her how much she earned by her hard work and was told that she received 4 soldi a day.

"Do you know," said he, "that I, too, am a shepherd? But I earn much more than you."

"Ah yes," answered the little peasant, "but no doubt you tend many more pigs than I do."

Impaling the Wild Boar.

In Germany the boar hunt occurs annually. Trained hounds are held in leash until the lair of the boars is sniffed, and then they are let go. Off rush the bristling beasts. They run fast, and the faster they skip along the wilder and "madder" they get. Sometimes they are shot, but the correct style of killing is to use a long spear or a short swordlike knife. The hunter spies his boarship speeding along in an almost straight line, blinded with rage and ferocity. Bending over sideways to the earth, the sportsman thrusts his spear dull end downward in the soil and the sharp point slanting upward and turned directly to the boar's path. Straight on the wild hog rushes, and with all the impetus of his long flight he plunges upon the spear point and there, impaled, dies a bloody death.

Peculiarity of Sea Otter Fur.

"This collar," said a furrier, "is sea otter skin, the costliest fur known. Silver fox, beside sea otter, is cheap. Where you would pay $1,000 for a silver fox skin you'd pay $2,000 for a sea otter. It is only the Russians, the world's greatest fur lovers, who go in for this most precious of all furs. They use it exclusively for coat collars. Why? For a strange reason, an almost incredible reason. Sea otter is the only fur on which the breath won't freeze."—Cincinnati Enquirer.

DRINK HABIT CURED "TO STAY CURED".

It is idle to preach of the evils of intemperance for everyone is familiar with them. It also is of little use telling the victim of the liquor or drug habit that the indulgence is injurious to him, that it not only wastes his substances, undermines his health and brings him into disgrace but ultimately entails sorrow and misery upon his family and makes him an object of loathing and contempt as well. The chances are he realizes all this far better than anyone else. The trouble is, his will power is so weakened and the craving is so great that he can't stop. He simply can't. He's got to have help. That help is just what has been giving the past thirteen years and it is with not a little pride that we point to our record when we think of the hundreds of poor unfortunates we have rescued from a fate worse than death—a drunkard's grave—the homes united and made happy and the tears for joy of the mothers, wives and children.

The cravings for alcoholic stimulants or narcotic drugs can be permanently removed by the Juliet Murray Lang Institute. That fact is well established. It matters not how a person becomes addicted to the habit or of how long duration it may be or how strong the craving or desire has become, the Juliet Murray Lang Institute soon gives relief. We destroy the appetite for drink, remove the alcohol from the system and then build the system up to its normal condition, leaving the patient mentally and physically the same as he was before the drink habit was formed.

The cost of treatment includes board and medicines and the services of the physician in charge. The terms are most reasonable and will be furnished upon application. If you have a friend or relative afflicted with the drink or drug habit you will be doing a worthy and charitable act in recommending him to the (correspondence strictly private)

THE SYMPHONY A SUCCESS

A full house of about fourteen hundred people greeted the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra at the Auditorium last Sunday evening. It was one of the greatest musical events in the history of the city. The Orchestra was all that had been claimed for it, and, while some of the vocal singing might have been better take it all in all, it was an unqualified success. This concert had been thoroughly advertised, the people had been quite thoroughly canvassed for pledged support and arrangements had been perfected to have two special trains facilitate the coming of outsiders, all this had thoroughly aroused the populace, and as a result at about 6 p. m., on Sunday all seats were already reserved and all the management had left to sell was standing room. Yes, the orchestra proved a success for themselves and a success for the management.

The troupe arrived here from Winipeg, where they played on Saturday, on a special that bore them through Crookston, Red Lake Falls and St. Hilaire, all of which points sent their quota of recruits to augment the already swelling crowd at the Auditorium. Another special was run down over the Great Northern from Beaudette arriving here at 4:10. This gave exceptional opportunities for our northern neighbors to come down and enjoy this musical treat with us. Many of them did so.

The Orchestra on this tour consisted of about 57 members the pick of the whole membership. This organization is known as one of the best of its kind in America, and the management of the Auditorium may justly feel some pride in having been able to secure them for our city. Neither did the orgaization have cause for regrets as the receipts were, in round numbers, $1,000.

Winters in Kogguing are very ered, which lasted just two hours:

SENATOR McCUMBER'S TOMATO

Memphis Commercial Appeal.

That great movements sometimes have small beginnings is a truism as old as the hills. But one of the most striking illustrations of the accuracy of the adage lies in the explanation of how the public fight against the high cost of living originated.

The story goes that Senator McCumber of North Dakota, finding himself hungry after a senate session, slipped out to the restaurant and ordered "a bite of something". The "bite" consisted mainly of one raw tomato, for which alone the famished solon was charged 25 cents. He gasped as he compared the size of the red sphere with the relaive size of the silver coin. He paid his bill, but his wrath was stirred, and, returning to his seat, he made a calculation that if one tomato cost 25 cents, a bushel would bring $400. Then He took a rapid survey of other articles and their prices on the menu card he had brought from the restaurant, and presently catching the vice presidential eye he rose to his feet.

The speech that followed was based on that tomato, which had been as a red flag to his anger. He told the senate how much it had cost him, and read aloud his mathematical calculations, demanding to know who, between him and the farmer, got the big money. From the tomato he passed on to other articles of food, expatiating on the prices, until the senators must have felt they had been literally eating money.

From that beginning, if we can credit the story—which certainly seems credible—came the storm of protest against the extravagant cost of the necessities of life which swept the whole country, and which will not subside until a democratic congress gives us a tariff revised to cut dow uprices.

Senator McCumber's tomato set a great movement afoot, and deserves a place with the historic relics already collected in the national legends.

L. B. GEERLINGS DEAD

L. B. Geerlings, who resided on Riverside avenue in Porters addition departed this life Wednesday, March 29th, 1911, at 5:50 p. m. He was born at Asten, Holland, and came to this country as a lad of 17 years. He was married at the age of 21, and spent most of his days in Michigan near the city of Jamestown, where two of his brothers still reside. Later in life he came west to Barnsville, Minn., where he engaged in farming operations until he came here some four years ago.

Ever since he struck Thief River Falls he has been high in its praises and has shown unbounded faith in the community. He had at the time of his death induced all his children save one, to take up their abode in his vicinity—the last of these, Mr. and Mrs. L. E. Geerlings had only been here one week, when death came to close his activities.

Personally he was keen, alert, mentally active and resourceful. He was thoughtful of the conveniences of others. Thus, only the day he was stricken, he came into the Press office and ordered two numbers forthwith to be continually sent to his son, L. E. and his son-in-law Wm. South, both at Germantown. They knew nothing of this. He was generous, and spared nothing to be of real assistance to those near and dear, or in any way dependent on him.

On Tuesday evening he had been up town to attend a meeting and returned about 10 o'clock. When he felt ill he crossed the street and called Philip Zeh to his assistance. Mr. Zeh took him home, called a doctor and his son-in-law, J. Coan living near Mavie. Soon after this he became unconscious and remained so till the end came. He evidently suffered a stroke of paralysis.

His son, L. E. Geerlings, and wife and his son-in-law, J. Coan were at his bedside when he died. His wife happened to be away on a visit to their old home in Michigan, and will not be here till to-night.

He leaves to mourn him his wife, his son, L. E. and wife, four daughters, Mrs. Gertie Coan, Mrs. Jennie Baker, Mrs. Annie South of Thief River Falls and vicinity, and Mrs. Nancy Strick of Jamestown, Mich., and two brothers, also of Jamestown, Mich., and twelve grand-children.

Where deceased will be enterred will not be decided till Mrs. Geerlings arrives, and date of funeral is not set.

The East Side is threatening to se- Red Lake Rapids. The East Side has its own water works, sewerage and electric light plant—all that is lacking now is a post office. The baby White Elephant is now on exhibition at the rear of the East Side meat market. He is a beautiful baby and can be washed with soap and water without tarnishing him, and, unlike his mother, his hide does not leak. He is ready for use. He requires neither skill nor experience to handle him, but he absolutely refuses to drink out of the Eight Hundred Dollar hole the city built for him in the middle of the river. He promises to protect the whole East Side from fire, also to furnish water and sewerage—that is, if his legs don't give out. For a week or more the city had seven men moving and putting new wooden legs under the baby, but East Siders, don't fear you are well protected from fire if the baby don't loose his off hind leg and fall into the Eight Hundred Dollar hole. When you talk to the East Side aldermen about the sewer they were going to put into the Knox school-house, upon which four hundred innocent children's lives almost depended the aldermen become a wee bit "techy" and say: "We can't help it the money is all gone and the Lord only knows where; each of us has an Electric street light in front of our residence and the road graded in front of our homes, and this is all the improvements that the rest of the council would allow the East Side". Did anyone say the East Side was not well taken care of! No, man, no; keep still and pay your taxes, that is all you got to do.

Yours truly,

Chas. Alexander.

PIANO RECITAL

Tuesday evening the pupils of H. G. Maxwell gave a piano recital at the Lincoln High School. The quality of this recital was a surprise indeed to the majority of people present. It reflected great credit both upon the players and their instructors, all of which were executed to the complete satisfaction of the most critical listeners. Judging from the attitude received, it would be safe to say that they received more genuine pleasure out of this recital than for many other attractions that has been here this winter. The parents of Thief River Falls and surrounding community should be congratulated upon the fact that they are giving their children such an excellent start in a musical education.

Superintendent Hay gave a short talk on "Music as a Factor in Education." He pointed out in an be derived in a financial and social be derived in a finaleial and social way from a musical education. G. H. Malvorson read a short and comprehensive paper on "Classic Composers."

Anti-Tuberclosis Lecture Should Be Well Attended.

Christopher A. Easton, executive secretary of the State Anti-Tuberculosis Association, will deliver an address which ought to be of great interest to every citizen of Thief River Falls, at the High School Assembly Room Saturday evening, April 1st. This is one of a series of lectures delivered in this part of the state and when it is remembered that the death rate from tuberculosis in the Red River Valley is 25 per cent in excess of the balance of the state the importance of an organized campaign against this Great White Plague can not be too strongly emphasized. The people of this city should be more enthusiastic in assisting in every possible way any movement of the local Anti-tuberculosis society which makes this meeting possible. Be present and urge others to be there too. At the High School Assembly Room, Saturday evening. Admission free.

There is one thing above others that has pained one every Spring since I came to this country—and that is the all-over present auction bill. It seems some times as if all the farmers in this country were going to sell out and leave. To a stranger in town it gives a doubly bad impression. A couple of weeks ago when the bills were most numerous, I was taking a getnleman from Minneapolis around the city and he asked me what the reason was that all the farmers are holding auction sales. "Its a serious matter," said he, and it should be looked after. Every business man in town and every good farmer in the country should do his utmost to prevent a farmer from selling out and leaving. You people can easily take care of a thousand more farmers and the sooner you get them the sooner your city will double in size. Other cities are spending money advertising their farm lands to enduce farmers to come their way. Don't you let a single farmer get away if, you can help it.

This Minneapolis man is right. As a purely agricultural community we have no greater asset than the thousands of acres of fertile land surrounding us. We can never expect Thief River Falls to grow as a manufacturing center until we have the rural districts settled up. You see why, don't you? Because manufacture thrives only in densely populated districts where there is a good demand for the articles produced. Neither can we hope to amount to much as a distributing point before we have more people around us to whom we can distribute.

Let us try to keep our farmers and to get a thousand more. Then watch us grow.

MADAM HELLSTROM GAGNEE, Concert.

The popular actress and folk-song interpreter, Hilda Hellstrom-Gagnee, of Stockholm, Sweden, who both in this country and abroad has met with such great success will appear in Thief River Falls on Monday, April 3rd under the auspices of the Brage Male Chorus in the Presbyterian church, assisted by Mr. Annas Myhre a baritone singer who has a wonderful quality of tone. As pianist and accompanist the troup is well assisted by Miss Eva Ashworth.

Their act from the famous folk play: "Varmlanningerna," which is to be given together with the musical program, has been exceptionally well received wherever given, and all who can understand the Scandinavian languages ought to be present at this, the best Scandinavian entertainment given in the city.

CO-OPERATION TAKING ROOT

The different Co-operative Store companies of this section of the state, through their officers and managers, have taken the first step toward the establishment of more unity of action between the different stores and especially in centralizing buying of goods.

A meeting was held last Wednesday in this city at which the co-operative stores at the following places were represented: Grygla, Germantown, Rollis, Badger, Roseau and Thief River Falls.

Sixteen delegates were present and yet others expressed their opinions through proxies.

It seemed to be the general sentiment that there would be considerable benefits to be derived from centralizing their purchasing so that much of their goods could be bought in carload lots. The different stores could then be notified and each get its share of the shipment. In this way freight charges would be reduced to a minimum and it would be possible to sell goods to their stockholders and patrons at a lower figure.

The co-operative sentiment is growing in this territory. The farmers already have their co-operative stores their co-operative creameries and an ever increasing number of co-operative grain elevators.

Last week a farmers' co-operative elevator company was orgaized in this city and about $10,000 of stock subscribed. An elevator is to be built at once. The organization was completed with the following officers: President, Theodore Rynestrand, Vice President, P. L. Dale; Treasurer, P. Estvad; Secretary, A. Nordby.

HIGH SCHOOL ATHLETICS

Basketball.

Last Friday evening the North Star College of Warren met the local team in, what was probably, the final game of the basketball season. The game started out with honors about even, the first half ending 9 to 8 in favor of Warren. The last half however, the visitors had the basket nicely located and piled up 17 points to the locals 8, the college winning with a final score of 26 to 16.

The score was a little onesided, but nevertheless the game was very interesting from the spectators, view point. The teams were about evenly matched in strength and speed, the main difference being that the local boys repeatedly failed to make, what should have been easy baskets. Johnson came forward at times with something of his old-time skill and saved the team from a too humiliating defeat. The game was fast and rough throughout. The Warren referee, however, was quite impartial.

The Commercial-Normal School and the Juniors furnished a lively preliminary, the Juniors winning 10 to 8. This game, while not as scientific as the main event, afforded much enjoyment on account of the enthusiasm with which the boys played.

Baseball.

Plenty of pre-season baseball spirit is now loose among the H. S. boys. The prospects for a winning team are better than ever before. No definite selection of players has been made yet, but it is quite certain that the batteries will be made up of Johnson and Fossum pitchers, and Lee and Lipscomb catchers. With some training these men will compare favorably with any High School players in the state. There will be at least two or three men trying out for other positions on the team.

The boys secured playing suits last year, but have not a very good lay- but the other baseball accessories. These latter will require more money than the boys could be expected to furnish. It is quite likely, therefore, that an athletic entertainment will be given soon after vacation. It is hoped that every member of the school and every citizen will be loyal enough to give their hearty support and encouragement to the boys. You will always get more than your money's worth, whether it be at an entertainment or on the baseball field. You know that from past experience.

Senior Literary.

The High School Seniors gave the first literary program of the season last Friday night. It is sufficient to say the entertainment was up to the usual high standard that has always been reached by the seniors. The large and enthusiastic audience was evidence of the fact that these literary programs are thoroughly appreciated, and are receiving the support which they so justly deserve.

KLEMER AND HIS TROUBLES

How Lynn Hains Looks At The Klemer Controversy. Other Issues.

(By) Lynn Haines.

Those twin infamies, senatorial courtesy and tory tradition, have individually and dually decreed that it is unparlimentary for a member of any legislative body to tell the truth concerning his colleagues. Accordingly, when R. L. Klemer of Fairbault charged that the committees of the House were "packed for the special interests," he started something—which the people will finish.

You know all about the incident and its consequences down to date. Every citizen of the state heard of Klemer long before this. So it remains for me only to make a few interpretations of the situation.

It happened when the judiciary committee were astraddle one of the most important measures of the session and were slowly, surely strangling it into insensibility. This was the C. L. Sulerud bill granting to the people of Minnesota the right to change their own constitution by a majority of the votes cast for any amendment. Supported by the afore said senatorial courtesy and tory tradition, which supplied both protection and precedent, the administration forces had pummelled almost the last expiring gasp from the helpless bil, when Mr. Klemer, mild and unarmored, entered the arena.

John G. Lennon, who lives legislatively by virtue of senatorial courtesy and tory tradition, had just reuttered that convenient sentiment, always and forever the refuge of the reactionary—"stand by the committee, we must stand by the report of the committee." Then Mr. Klemer arose and in a soft, gentle voice, reminded him that the committee's were packed for the special interests. The howl that went up proved that his charges were true. If they had been unfounded, ar spoken only in the heat of debate," they would have been laughingly cast aside. That would have been an excellant way for the reactionaries. But Klemer touched a tender spot. They were guilty.

Here is another reason for "the tempest in a teapot." Mr. Klemer is a slender gentleman and very, very meek. His face is kindly and his voice exceedingly sweet and tender in all its tones. That was why the reactionaries blundered. Up to that epochical period Klemer had stood consistently with the insurgents but had said little. He was mild and, it seemed safe, perfectly safe, for the administration machine to proclaim their political purity at [illegible] expense. Others had made statements more unparlimentary than his. W. I. Nolan of Minneapolis had asserted that the brewers were busy as bees in the present legislature. Special interest members will stand for almost any accusation rather than that they are subject to the unscrupulous brewery combine. But they knew that Mr. Nolan was experienced and forceful and fearless. It was different with Mr. Klemer. He didn't look loaded, so the bull-dozing brigade proceeded to make an example of him.

L. C. Spooner, Bob Dunn, John G. Lennon, Moriarity, at al., simply could not restrain their "righteous indignation," and with a display of voices and false fists and teeth intended to induce the mild mannered Mr. Klemer to retire thru the keyhole, they demanded that he apologize. Next Speaker, H. H. Dunn hied himself into the blustering business and threatened physical restitution for the insult. Mr. Klemer, still meek and mild, arose to reply—and of course to apologize. But he didn't. The blustering had been overdone. Instead, he reiterated his charge. Where upon the bluffing began again and Bob Dunn moved the appointment of a committee of three to inquire into the Klemer incident. Speaker Dunn appointed Bob Dunn, L. C. Spooner and Albert Pfaender, which certainly gave Mr. Klemer grounds for his charge of packed committees, if justification had not existed before.

Even after the affair had progressed this far Mr. Klemer was ready to apologize for unparlimentary language. But, I am reliably informed, one of Speaker Dunn's lieutenants went to him and suggested that his apology be withheld until the following morning, saying "you are not the man we are after," and inferring that they were not quite ready with their scheme to turn the incident against the other fellow. Modesty prevents any attempt on my part to identify the stranger. He was referred to by L. C. Spooner as "a malevolent devil" and later several standpatters privately endorsed the sentiment and expressed the hope that God might take him home. They also discussed means of giving legislative aid to the Lord in this connection. These reactionaries had heard of the possibility of the publication of a history of the present session and knowing that conditions were never so unprogressive, nor so easily analyzed, they were naturally interested. "We've got to dig a cyclone cellar," said one. "No let's put the cyclone in a cellar, said another. But to return to Klemer.

•!•!•!•!•!

Mr. Klemer did not apologize the next morning. Instead he made this statement.

"Mr. Speaker: In my remarks yesterday on the floor of this House, I said that the committee of this House were packed in the interests of the special interests. I simply said what I believed to be true from what I have learned since my election; I am not the only person in this state who entertains this belief I was simply voicing the sentiments of a large proportion of the general public.

"I am willing to apologize for what I have said if, after a thorough and impartial investigation by this House it shall appear that my convictions and the conbictions of the public are not well founded.

"I therefore propose, Mr. Speaker, that a committee of seven members be appointed, of which I shall be allowed to name three members and the Speaker three members and that the six members so appointed be authorized to name the seventh member, for the purpose of investigating the charges that I have made, and that such committee be given full power to subpoena witnesses and compel the production of books and papers bearing on this question, and I beg leave to express the wish that it may conclusively appear that this House has been organized in the interests of the people of this state and not packed for the special interests. Until such time, I respectfully request that my apology be deferred."

Next Mr. Klemer further surprised and practically routed the reactionaries by offering a resolution providing for a committee to investigate three to be appointed by himself, three by the speaker, and those six to name the seventh. His resolution further provided that this committee should have the power to summon witnesses and get all the evidence they desired on the subject of packed committees. At this point incident of the whole controversy, when Speaker Dunn sneeringly referred to Klemer resolution as being unfit for consideration by any parlimentary body. And the speaker was saved from presenting it to the House by Spooner's motion for a recess. The reactionaries sought safety from the meek, mild little man from Fairbault in adjournment.

Mr. Klemer had put them "in a hole." I believe that the reactionaries reasoned like this: If we give Klemer—they omitted the mister—an impartial committee, appointed partly by himself, he will prove his charges; so we can't do that. But if we attempt to discipline him without the hearing he demands, it will be so obviously unfair that the people will not stand for the injustice.

Yet the reactionaries risked the latter. Friday they attempted a vote of censure against Klemer. But they could only muster 68 votes, whereas they needed 80 to do the deed at that time under a suspension of the rules. The vote was as follows:

To censure Klemer without a hearing:—Aker, Andrew Anderson, Borgen, Bouck, G. W. Brown, L. D. Brown, Clarke, Deuzer, Diessner, R. C. Dunn, Ferguson, Fowler, Fuchs,

TELEPHONE BILL PASSES

Public Utilities Measure Carries in House 89 to 17. Substitute Killed.

Just as we go to press the news comes that the public utilities bill, more popularly known as the "Telephone Bill" passed the House of Representatives yesterday by the overwhelming vote of 89 to 27. The same report also states that a substitute bill introduced by D. P. O'Neill was first voted down by a vote of 79 to 17.

After the Press was published last week, we had word (on Saturday) that D. P. O'Neill had changed his mind and would no longer support the original measure. He went to work on a substitute bill and brought this to a vote yesterday with the result that he was defeated, and the original bill came up and was passed with 62 majority.

THE YOUNG BRIDE'S FIRST DISCOVERY.

Their wedding tour had ended, and they entered their new home to settle down to what they hoped to be one long uninterrupted blissful honey moon.

But, alas! the young bride's troubles soon began, when she tried to reduce the cost of living with cheap big can baking powders.

She soon discovered that all she got was a lot for her money, and it was not all baking powder, for the bulk of it was cheap materials which had no leavening power. Such powders will not make light, wholesome food. And because of the absence of leavening gas, it requires from two to three times as much to raise cakes or biscuits as it does of Calumet Baking Powder.

Thus, eventually, the actual cost to you, of cheap baking powders, is more than Calumet would be.

Cheap baking powders often leave the bread bleached and acid, sometimes yellow and alkaline, and often unpalatable. They are not always of uniform strength an dquality.

Now the bride buys Calumet—the perfectly wholesome baking powder, moderate in price, and always uniform and reliable. Calumet keeps indefinitely, makes cooking easy, and is certainly the most economical after all.

The Great Conservation Novel

By HAMLIN GARLAND

Copyright, 1910, by Hamlin Garland

The diners were all smiling, and Gregg took a malicious satisfaction in her defeat. She had held herself haughtily apart from him, and he was glad to see her humbled.

Leaving her place behind the counter, she walked through the room with uplifted head and burning eyes, her heart filled with bitterness and fire. She hated the whole town, the whole state at the moment. Were these "the chivalrous short grass knights" she had heard so much about—these the large souled "western founders of empire?" At the moment she was in the belief that all the heroes of her childhood had been of the stamp of Neill Ballard.

In the hall her pride, her sense of duty, came back to her, and she halted her fleeing feet. "I will not be beaten," she declared, and her lips straightened. "I will not let these dreadful creatures make a fool of me in that way."

Thereupon she turned and went back, pale now, but resolved to prove herself the mistress of the situation. Fortunately Redfield had returned, and his serene presence helped her to recover complete control of herself. She remained coldly blank to every compliment, and by this means she subdued them.

The doctor, appearing suddenly in the door, beckoned to her, and, leaving her place, she crossed to where he stood. "Your mother needs you," he said curtly. "Go to her and keep her quiet for an hour or two if you can."

"What is the matter, doctor?"

"I can't tell you precisely, but you must get her on a diet and keep her there. I will write out some lists for you after my luncheon."

Lee found her mother sitting in such dejection as she had never known her to display, though she fired up sufficiently to say: "That cussed little thimblerigger has been throwing a great big scare into me. He says I've got to get outdoors, live on raw meat and weak tea and walk five miles a day. That's what he says," she added in renewed astonishment at the man's audacity. "Who's at the cash?"

"Mr. Redfield," replied Lee. "I'll go right back."

"No, you won't. I'm no dead horse yet." She struggled to her feet and started for the cash register. "I won't let no little Omaha dougbie like that put me out of business."

Despite all warnings she walked out into the dining room and took her accustomed seat with set and stern face.

subtler than the electrical current vibrated. He called to her in wordless fashion, and she answered in the same mysterious code, and when she said "Goodby!" and hung up the receiver her world went suddenly gray and commonplace, as if a ray of special sunlight had been withdrawn.

CHAPTER X.

THE POACHERS.

ONE morning as he topped the rise between the sawmill and his own station Cavanagh heard two rifle shots in quick succession snapping across the high peak on his left. Bringing his horse to a stand, he unslung his fieldglasses and slowly and minutely swept the tawny slopes of Sheep mountain, from which the forbidden sounds seemed to come.

"A herder shooting coyotes," was his first thought. Then, remembering that there were no camps in that direction and that a flock of mountain sheep (which he had been guarding carefully) habitually fed round that grassy peak, his mind changed. "I wonder if those fellows are after those sheep," he mused as he angled down the slope. "I reckon it's up to me to see."

In less than three hours he was over on the trail in the canyon, quite certain that the hunters were still above him. He rode quietly up the valley, pausing often to listen and to scrutinize the landscape, but no sign of campfire, and no further rifle shots came, and at last he went into camp upon the trail, resolved to wait till the poachers appeared, a ward which his experience as a soldier helped him to maintain without nodding.

In these long hours his thought played about the remembrance of his last visit to the Fork and his hour with Lee. He wondered what she was doing at the moment. How charming she had looked there at Redfields'—so girlish in form, so serious and womanly of face!

He felt as never before the indudible loneliness of the ranger's life. The guardians of these high places must forever be solitary. No ranger could rightfully be husband and father, for to bring women and children into these solitudes would be cruel.

He put all this aside—for the time—by remembering that he was a soldier under orders and that marriage was a long way off, and so smoked his pipe and waited for the dawn, persistent as a Sioux and as silent as a fox.

At daylight, there being still no sign of his quarry, he saddled his horse and was about to ride up the trail when he caught the sound of voices and the sharp click of iron hoofs on the rocks above him. With his horse's bridle in his arm he awaited the approaching horsemen, resolute and ready to act.

As the marauders rounded the elbow in the trail he was surprised to recognize in the leader young Gregg. The other man was a stranger, an older man, with a grizzled beard, and tall and stooping figure.

"Hello, Joe!" called the ranger. "You're astir early!"

The youth's fat face remained imperturbable, but his eyes betrayed uneasiness. "Yes, it's a long pull into town."

"Oh, no; just visiting one of my sheep camps."

Cavanagh's voice was a little less suave. "Not on this creek," he declared. "I moved your herder last week." He walked forward. "That's a heavy load for a short trip to a sheep camp." He put his hand on the pack. "I guess you'll have to open this, for I heard two shots yesterday morning up where that flock of mountain sheep is running, and, furthermore, I can see blood stains on this saddle blanket."

Gregg threw out a hand in command. "Open it up, Edwards!" he said sullenly.

Off came the outfit, and under the tent lay the noble head of a wild ram, a look of reproach still in his splendid yellow eyes.

Cavanagh's face hardened. "I thought so. Now heave it back and cinch up. It's you to the nearest magistrate, which happens to be Higley of Roaring Fork. I'll make an example of you fellows."

There was nothing for Gregg to say and nothing for Edwards to do but obey, for a resolute ranger with an excellent weapon of the latest and most approved angular pattern stood ready to enforce his command, and when the pack was recinched Cavanagh waved an imperative hand. "I guess I'll have to take charge of your guns," he said, and they yielded without a word of protest. "Now march! Take the left hand trail."

while her daughter went to the table where the doctor sat and explained her inability to manage her mother.

"That's your problem," he replied coolly. Then rapidly, succinctly and clearly he went over the case and laid out a course of treatment. Out of it all Lee deduced that her mother was very ill indeed, though not in danger of sudden death.

"She's on the chute," said Fessenden, "and everything depends upon her own action whether she takes the plunge this winter or twenty years from now. She's a strong woman, or has been, but she has presumed upon her strength. She used to live out of doors, she tells me, during all her early life, and now, shut in by these walls, working sixteen hours a day, she is killing herself. Get her out if you can and cut out stimulants."

As he rose and approached the counter Lize shoved a couple of gold pieces across the board. "That wipes you off my map," she grimly declared. "I hope you enjoyed your ride."

"It's up to you, madam," he replied, pocketing the gold. "Good-day!"

"I'll be down again in a day or two," called Redfield.

The machine began to pur and spit and the wheels to spin, and Lee Virginia was left to face her mother's obstinate resistance alone. She felt suddenly very desolate, very weak and very poor. "What if mother should die?" she asked herself.

Gregg was standing before the counter talking with Lize as Lee returned, and he said, with a broad smile, "I've just been saying I'd take this hotel off your mother's hands provided you went with it."

In the mouths of some men these words would have been harmless enough, but coming from the tongue of one whose life could only be obscurely hinted at the jest was an insult. The girl shuddered with repulsion, and Lize spoke out:

"Now, see here, Bullfrog, I'm dead on the hoof and all that, but neither you nor any other citizen like you can be funny with my girl. She's not for you. Now, that's final! She ain't your kind."

She turned to Lee. "I'm hungry. Where's that grub chart of mine?"

Lee brought the doctor's page of notes and read it through, while her mother snorted at intervals: "Hah! Dry toast, weak tea, no coffee, no alcohol. Huh! I might as well starve! Eggs—fish—milk! Why didn't he say boiled live lobsters and champagne? I tell you right now I'm not going to go into that kind of a game. If I die I'm going to die eating what I blame please."

The struggle had begun. With desperate courage Lee fought, standing squarely in the rut of her mother's daily habit. "You must not hive up here any longer," she insisted. "You must get out and walk and ride. I can take care of the house, at least till we can sell it."

It was like breaking the pride of an athlete, but little by little she forced upon her mother a realization of her true condition, and at last Lize consented to offer the business for sale.

Lee longed for the presence of Ross Cavanagh at this moment, when all her little world seemed tumbling into ruin, and almost in answer to her wordless prayer came a messenger from the little telephone office, "Some one wants to talk to you."

She answered this call hurriedly, thinking at first that it must be Mrs. Redfield. The booth was in the little sitting room of a private cottage, and the mistress of the place, a shrewd little woman with inquisitive eyes, said, "Sounds to me like Ross Cavanagh's voice."

Lee was thankful for the booth's privacy, for her cheeks flamed up at this remark, and when she took up the receiver her heart was beating so loud it seemed as if the person at the other end of the wire must hear it. "Who is it, please?" she asked, with breathless intensity.

A man's voice came back over the wire so clear, so distinct, so intimate, it seemed as if he were speaking into her ear. "It is I, Ross Cavanagh. I want to ask how your mother is."

"She is terribly disheartened by what the doctor has said, but she is in no immediate danger."

He perceived her agitation and was instantly sympathetic. "Can I be of use? Do you need me? If you do I'll come down."

"Where are you?"

"I am at the sawmill, the nearest telephone station."

"How far away are you?"

"About thirty miles."

"Oh!" She expressed in this little sound her disappointment, and as it trembled over the wire he spoke quickly: "Please tell me! Do you want me to come down? Never mind the distance. I can ride it in a few hours."

She was tempted, but bravely said: "No; I'd like to see you, of course, but the doctor said mother was in no danger. You must not come on our account."

He felt the wonder of the moment's intercourse over the wilderness steeps and said so. "You can't imagine how strangely sweet and civilized your voice sounds to me here in this savage place. It makes me hope that some day you and Mrs. Redfield will come up and visit me in person."

"I should like to come."

"Perhaps it would do your mother good to camp for awhile. Can't you persuade her to do so?"

"I'm trying to do that—I mean, to stop work—but she says, 'What can we do to earn a living?'"

"If nothing happens I hope to spend an hour or two at the Fork next Sunday. I hope to find your mother better."

Their words were of this unemotional sort, but in their voices something

A couple of hours of silent travel brought them to the ranger's cabin, and there he ordered a dismount.

As the coffee was boiling he lectured them briefly. "You fellows are not entirely to blame," he remarked philosophically. "You've been educated to think a game warden a joke and Uncle Sam a long way off. But things have changed a bit. The law of the state has made me game warden, and I'm going to show you how it works. It's my duty to see that you go down the road—and down you go!"

Edwards, the guide, was plainly very uneasy and made several attempts to reach Cavanagh's private ear and at last succeeded. "I've been fooled into this," he urged. "I was hard up and a stranger in the country, and this young fellow hired me to guide him across the range. I didn't shoot a thing. I swear I didn't. If you'll let me off I'll hit the trail to the west and never look back. Don't take me down the road. Let me off!"

"I can't do that," replied Cavanagh, but his tone was kindlier, for he perceived that the old fellow was thin, hollow chested and poorly clad. "You knew you were breaking the laws, didn't you?"

This the culprit admitted. "But I was working for Sam Gregg, and when Joe asked me to go show him the trail I didn't expect to get cinched for killing game. I didn't fire a shot—now that's the truth."

"Nevertheless," retorted Ross, "you were packing the head, and I must count you in the game."

Edwards fell silent then, but something in his look deepened the ranger's pity. His eyes were large and dark, and his face so emaciated that he seemed fit only for a sanitarium.

The trip to the Fork (timed to the gait of a lazy pack horse) was a tedious eight hours' march, and it was nearly 7 o'clock when they arrived at the outskirts of the village.

To the casual observer in a town of this character there was nothing specially noticeable in three horsemen driving a pack horse, but to those whose eyes were keen the true relationship of the ranger to his captives was instantly apparent, and when they alighted at Judge Higley's office a bunch of eager observers quickly collected.

"Hello, Joe! What luck?" called Ballard.

"Our luck was a little too good—we caught a game warden," replied the young scapegrace.

The ranger was chagrined to find the office of the justice closed for the day and, turning to his captives, said: "I'm hungry, and I've no doubt you are. I'm going to take you into Mike Halsey's saloon for supper, but remember you are my prisoners."

In fifteen minutes the town was rumbling with the news. Under Ballard's deviltry all the latent hatred of the ranger and all the concealed opposition to the forest service came to the surface like the scum on a pot of broth. The saloons and eating houses boiled with indignant protest. "What business is it of Ross Cavanagh's?" they demanded. "What call has he to interfere? He's not a game warden."

"Yes, he is. All these rangers are game wardens," corrected another.

"No, they're not. They have to be commissioned by the governor."

"Well, he's been commissioned. He's warden all right."

"I don't believe it. Anyhow, he's too fresh. He needs to have a halt. Let's do him. Let's bluff him out."

Lee Virginia was in the kitchen superintending the service when one of the waiters came in breathless with excitement. "Ross Cavanagh has shot Joe Gregg for killing sheep!"

Lee faced her with blanched face. "Who told you so?"

"They're all talking about it out there. Gee, but they're hot! Some of 'em want to lynch him."

A half dozen men were standing before the counter talking with Lize, but Lee pushed in to inquire with white, inquiring face: "What is it all about? What has happened?"

"Nothing much," Lize replied contemptuously, "but you'd think a horse had been stole. Ross has nipped Joe Gregg and one of his herders for killing mountain sheep."

"Do you mean he shot them?"

"Yes; he took their heads."

Lee stood aghast. "What do you mean? Whose heads?"

The girl flushed with confusion as the men roared over her blunder. "One of the girls told me Mr. Cavanagh had killed a man," she explained. "Where is he?"

Lize betrayed annoyance. "They say he's taking supper at Mike Halsey's, though why he didn't come here I don't see. What's he going to do?" she asked. "Won't the marshal take the men off his hands?"

"Not without warrant from Higley, and Higley is out of town. Ross'll have to hold 'em till Higley gets back or else take 'em over to Chauvenet," Lize snorted. "Old Higley! Yes, he's been known to disappear before when there was some real work to be done."

Lee went back to her own task with a vague sense of alarm. "Certainly they will not dare to interfere with an officer in the discharge of his duties," she thought. She was eager to see him, and the thought that he might be obliged to ride away to Chauvenet without a word to her gave her a deeper feeling of annoyance and unrest. That he was in any real danger she could not believe.

It was disheartening to Cavanagh to see how some of the most influential citizens contrived to give encouragement to the riotous element of the town. A wink, a gesture, a careless word to the proper messenger, conveyed to the saloon rounders an assurance of sympathy which inflamed their resentment to the murderous point. It was confessedly one of the worst communities in the state.

"Let's run Cavanagh!" was the suggestion of several of Gregg's friends.

The fact that the ranger was a commissioned officer of the law and that the ram's head had been found on the poacher's pack made very little difference to these irresponsible instigators to assault. It was wonderful how highly that loafing young rascal, Joe Gregg, was prized at the moment. "It's an outrage that the son of a leading citizen should be held up in this way by one of the forestry Cossacks," declared one of the merchants.

The discussion which took place over the bars of the town was at the riot heat by 9 o'clock, and soon after 10 a crowd of howling, whooping bad boys and disreputable ranch hands were parading the walks, breathing out vile threats against the ranger.

Accustomed to men of this type, Cavanagh watched them come and go at Halsey's bar with calculating eyes. "There will be no trouble for an hour or two, but meanwhile what is to be done? Higley is not to be found, and the town marshal is also 'out of town.'" To Halsey he said: "I am acting, as you know, under both federal and state authority, and I call upon you as a law abiding citizen to aid me in holding these men prisoners. I shall camp right here till morning or until the magistrate or the marshal relieves me of my culprits."

Halsey was himself a sportsman—a genuine lover of hunting and a fairly consistent upholder of the game laws; but, perceiving that the whole town had apparently lined up in opposition to the ranger, he lost courage. His consent was half hearted, and he edged away toward the front window of his barroom, nervously seeking to be neutral—"to carry water on both shoulders," as the phrase goes.

The talk grew less jocular as the drinks took effect, and Neill Ballard, separating himself from the crowd, came forward, calling loudly: "Come out o' there, Joe! Come out and have a drink!"

His words conveyed less of battle than his tone. He was, in fact, urging a revolt, and Cavanagh knew it.

Gregg rose as if to comply. The ranger stopped him.

"Keep your seat," said he, and to Ballard he warningly remarked, "And you keep away from my prisoners."

"Do you own this saloon?" retorted the fellow truculently. "I reckon Halsey's customers have some rights. What are you doing here, anyway? This is no jail."

"Halsey has given me the privilege of holding my prisoners here till the justice is found. It isn't my fault that the town is without judge or jail." He was weakened by the knowledge that Halsey had only half consented to aid justice, but his pride was roused and he was determined upon carrying his arrest to its legitimate end. [illegible]ished if I have to carry them to Sulphur City," he added.

"Smash the lights!" shouted some one at the back.

Here was the first real note of war, and Ross cried out sharply, "If a man lifts a hand toward the light I'll cut it off!"

There was a stealthy movement in the crowd, and, leaping upon the counter, a reckless cub reached for the lamp.

Cavanagh's revolver shattered the globe in the fellow's very palm. "Get down from there!" he commanded.

CHAPTER XI.

LIZE PLAYS A MAN'S PART—ALSO LEE.

THE mob besieging Cavanagh in Halsey's saloon had not found its leader. It hesitated and blustered, but did not strike and eventually edged out of the door and disappeared. But the silence which followed its retreat was more alarming to the ranger than its presence. Some slier mischief was in these minds. He feared that they were about to cut the electric light wires and so plunge him into darkness, and to prepare for that emergency he called upon the bartender (Halsey having vanished) for a lamp or a lantern.

The fellow sullenly set about this task, and Ross, turning to Gregg, said, "If you've any influence with this mob you'd better use it to keep them out of mischief, for I'm on this job to the bitter end, and somebody's going to be hurt."

Gregg, who seemed quite detached from the action and rather delighted with it, replied: "I have no influence. They don't care a hang about me. They have it in for you, that's all."

Edwards remained silent, with his hat drawn low over his eyes. It was evident that he was anxious to avoid being seen and quite willing to keep out of the conflict; but, with no handcuffs and the back door of the saloon unguarded, Ross was aware that his guard must be incessant and alertly vigilant.

"Such a thing could not happen under the English flag," he said to himself, and at the moment his adopted country seemed a miserable makeshift. Only the thought of Redfield and the chief nerved him for the long vigil. "The chief will understand if it comes up to him," he said.

Lize Wetherford came hurrying in, looking as though she had just risen from her bed. She was clothed in a long red robe, her grizzled hair was loose, her feet were bare, and she carried a huge old fashioned revolver in her hand. Her mouth was stern.

Stopping abruptly as she caught sight of Ross standing in the middle of the floor unhurt, she exclaimed: "There you are! Are you all right?"

"As a trivet," he replied.

She let her gun hand relax. "What was the shooting?"

"A little bluff on my part."

"Anybody hurt?"

"No."

She was much relieved. "I was afraid they'd got you. I came as quick as I could. I was abed. That fool doctor threw a chill into me, and I've been going to roost early according to orders. I didn't hear your gun, but Lee did, and she came to tell me. Don't let 'em get behind you. If I was any good I'd stay and help. What you going to do—hold your men here all night?"

"I don't see any other way. Halsey turned the place over to me, but"— He looked about him suspiciously.

"Bring 'em into my place. Lee has had new locks put on our doors; they'll help some."

"I don't like to do that, Mrs. Wetherford," he replied, with greater respect than he had ever shown her before. "They may attack me there."

"All the better; I'll be on hand to help. But they're less likely to boil in on you through a locked door."

"But your daughter? It will alarm her."

not come of the "fuss" for where there is smoke, as the old saying goes, but when important bills fail to even get a hearing is would seem as if such matters might at least be deferred or settled with as little loss of time as possible.

The Duluth Herald keeps harping on the string of its own invention that "the big interests, the forces of special privilege," are the ones that are fighting Canadian reciprocity. It knows better, or ought to. More and more evidence accumulates every day to prove that it is "the big interests, the forces of special privelege," that are back of the agreement and doing their utmost to jam it through congess. And some of those "special interests" are located right in Duluth, as the Herald artlessly admitted some time ago. Let the big users of print paper, the Hill railroads, the Duluth and twin city grain men, the big millers, the syndicates with immense land holdings in Canada, the manufacturers of farm machinery and a lot of wholesalers withdraw their support of the Taft agreement and we would very soon hear the last of it. Nothing but the "interests" have prevented it from already become a dead issue.—Warren Register.

The question for each man to settle is not what he would do if he had means, time, influence and educational advantages but what he will do with the things he has.—Hamilton Wright Mabie.

A sign board bears the following inscription: "Not a Has-been-not a Will-be—I'm An Is-er." How very typical of what a man must be in this present day life if he wishes to be a success. And by success we do not mean success merely in money-making, money-saving or money-keeping that indeed is a poor kind of success. But the success that enables a man to face his Maker and his fellow-man unflinchingly no matter in what walk of life he may be must be an "Is-er. The world tolerates no back numbers, nor vapid dreamers, a man can not win fame on past deeds nor fair promises, neither his fore-fathers nor his descendants will be able to make him a man among men to be noticed.—Be an "Is-er".

A farmer recently left his place in the morning, and when he returned at night he found his home in ashes. His house, barn, every building on the place, all his machinery hay, feed, everything he owned except his live stock were burned by a fire that some one had set in an adjoining swamp. His wife had gone through all the terror of seeing her home that she had worked so hard for burn, after she had tried in vain to stop the approach of the fire.

The Fire Laws.

The state legislature in its present session is giving much attention to improving the forest fire laws, but no law can ever be made that will give positive protection to the settler. The settler must do more to protect himself, and the villages and town of the timbered sections must look more to their own protection. The state can so patrol the forests that afire can be prevented from spreading over a large area, and it can do more to prevent the careless starting of fires and the criminal neglect of them by men who carelessly start them, but it cannot protect every individual town from fires started at their own doors where there is combustible material between the fire and the buildings.

What Must Be Done.

The settler in the timber must do as the settler on the prairie did in the early days—put out a fire-break. The prairie farmer expected a fire every fall and prepared for it. There is greater need of preparation on the part of farmers living in the timber, and yet this preparaton is commonly neglected. It is neglected for the reason that a sweeping fire in the woods is uncommon. Fires may appear for days and weeks in the woods and burn and die out without doing damage. The settler's place and the village may stand for years with little protection—stand until protection is forgotten—and then in an unguarded time be entirely destroyed. Over one-half the farmers' places and villages and towns in the timber section of Northern Minnesota are without ample fire protection. Nothing but a plowed field or a tract that has been burned over is protection on the edge of a forest.

Farmers, plow a firebreak around your buildings where the plowed field does not give protection. The clearing itself is not protection unless it is plowed. Make that firebreak an important and necessary part of each year's work.

Village officials entrusted with forest fire protection should do something more than tack up the sign sent out from the fire warden's office, warning against setting fire. All brush and dead timber for a space of three hundred feet surrounding the entire vilage should be burned. A few men and a few days' work at the proper time can give protection to a town from forest fire in this way than any state law can possibly give. A day given to protection before the fire is worth a year afterward. Self protection is the first and greatest law.

The farmer living at a distance in the woods without near neighbors and without telephone connections should realize this most of all.

In spite of all the disaster of the past season from forest fires, fires are still set and allowed to run. People have been lenient in dealing with men who start fires for clearing land, but a man who starts it to run, and gives no concern to it should be dealt with to the limit of the law, and a law in this respect cannot be made too severe.

Then place it in the oven with a piece of pork laid over its breast. Pour the liquor over and around the roast in the pan. Finish the cooking in a very hot oven, basting frequently with the drippings. When ready to serve skim off any superfluous fat that may be in the pan before preparing the gravy. The pork prevents the fowl from becoming dry, and if a small onion is also added it will have a more savory flavor. The simmering lessens its toughness. In fact, slow simmering is just the thing for any tough meat, but it should simmer, not boil. Boiling will toughen the tenderest of meat

A Death Lure.

According to tradition, Kenith, the legendary king of Scotland, was allured to his death in a most novel manner. Kenith had slain a son and brother of Fennella, who to be avenged ordered Wiltus, a famous silversmith, to construct a death dealing statue of silver. In its right hand the statue held a basin and in the left hand an apple of pure gold, both set with diamonds and other precious stones. To touch the apple was to defy death, it being so arranged that any one guilty of such vandalism would be immediately riddled by poisoned arrows shot from openings in the body of the statue. Kenith was invited to inspect the wonder, and, as Fennella had hoped, he tried to pluck the precious imitation fruit. When his hand touched the apple he was wounded by the arrows and died where he fell.

"My friend," he said, "I didn't intend to hurt your feelings. I just wanted you to close the door."

The man who was weeping raised his head and grinned. "Old man," he said, "I'm not crying because you hurt my feelings, but because you asked me if I was raised in a barn. The sad fact is that I was raised in a barn, and every time I hear an ass bray it makes me homesick."—Louisville Times.

Washington Letter.

Washington, D. C., March 29, 1911.

Unless the Democratic caucus to be held April 1st, discards the selections made by the committe on Ways and Means at least three chairmanships wil be held by reactionary Democrats, and, in the opinion of progressive members of the party now in control of the lower House if these selections stand Democracy starts out in a bad way. These chairmanships are all important ones and are for the committee on appropriations, committee on interstate and foreign commerce and the committee on agriculture. Fitzgerald of New York has been selected to head the important committee on appropriations, while Adamson of Georgia has been chosen as the chairman of the committee on interstate and foreign commerce. Burleson of Texas was a rival of Fitzgerald for the coveted position as chairman of the appropriation committee, but since the latter has lost out it is thought he will be given agriculture, another big committee assignment and of great importance to the middle west.

Adamson of Georgia, selected by the committe on Ways and Means to head the committe on interstate and foreign commerce, is a reactionary of the strongest type and his selection met with the strongest objection from the progressive element among the Democrats. He is opposed to federal regulation of railroads. He has always shown his opposition to legislation tending to strengthen national railway regulation and supervision. It was because of his unfriendly attitude to legislaton of this character that he was selected in the face of the strong est protests possible.

Fitzgerald's selection as chairman of the committee on appropriations was likewise objected to by progressive Democrats on the ground that he is a Tammany Democrat, one of the twenty-three House Democrats who voted with Cannon on the rules which made the said twenty-three very unpopular for a time with the rank and file of the then minority House party. The New York representative is considered one of the ablest and strongest parlimentarians on the Democratic side, and this fact undoubtedly had something to do with the committee's selection. The chairman of the appropriations' committee must be versed in parliamentary law as well as thoroughly familiar with the great appropriation bills, which he has charge of during their discussion on the House floor. Just the same, the progressive Democrats insist that Fitzgerald, will be a handicap to the welfare of the party. He belongs to another wing of the party, the reactionary wing, they say, and they do not approve of his being made a stumbling block for party progress. They say the same things about Adamson of Georgia. When the Democrats hold their caucus April 1st, a spirited fight is sure to be waged on this matter of approving of the selection of Fitzgerald and Adamson. The Democratic progressives are not in humor to let the selection stand without going on record as being against these men and making a strong opposition fight in the party caucus.

It is practically certain that Burleson of Texas will have the chairmanship of the committee on agriculture although he does not want this place, preferring appropriations. The agricultural interests of the country, especially east and west, object to Burleson heading the committee on agriculture, because of his leanings towards oleomargarine. He has always been a friend of oleo and has introduced a bill for the repeal of the duty on that product. He has never been considered friendly to the dairy interests, preferring evidently to cast his lot with the other side. The oleo industry has its raificatious in the South, especially noticeable in the cotton-seed oil interests. Burleson is from Texas where cottonseed oil is a strong factor.

The white doves of peace are said to have alighted on the White House and the surrounding grounds and to have dispelled the Mexican war cloud. The Mobilizing of an army of approximately 20,000 soldiers on the border is sure to receive attention at the hands of the extra session of Congress. Many members of the House and Senate want to know something more than has appeared in the press as to the reasons back of this unprecedended movement of troops. For a time it looked as if we had gone to the Mexican border with a very large chip on our shoulder, with a challenge to knock it off. History tells us, I believe, that at least two of our wars could have been avoided. There is such a thing as looking for trouble. There are undoubtedly thousands of small American investors in Mexican properties. However, the great bulk of the investments are in the hands of the big syndicates, such as the Guggenheim-Morgan syndicate, and other Wall street operators. They are the ones most vitally interested in the protection of American properties. Because of this fact, the recent developments in the Mexican situaton, with the possible drawing in of the United States, has been called a Wall street "war". There are no indications that the Mexican government is not fully capable of protecting property and handling the present situation, without outside interference.

Representative W. A. Campbell, of Minneapolis, in attempting to pass the mail carriers' street car bill over the Governor's veto, charged that the influence of E. E. Smith in the interest of the Twin City Transit Company had virtually led to the executive action against the measure. Yet Mr. Campbell was not Klemerized.

The presence of Elmer E. Adams, ex-Most Hated man in the House, among the representatives during the Klemer casualty was about balanced by Dar Reese, Tom Brady, W. A. Nolan, Oscar Christianson, John Selb, et. al., who were on hand to witness the murder which didn't occur.

Frank B. Lamson, secretary of the progressive republican league, had a memorandum book stolen from his overcoat pocket while that garment reposed in one of the capitol cloak rooms. Samuel McKenzie, lineman of the Tri-State telephone company died last Wednesday noon at the city hospital, where he had been for some time. He became dependent by helping his dying brother at Crookston last fall to the extent of all he possessed at that time. Soon after his return from his brother's funeral he was himself taken ill and has been able to do no work since. The cerebral menengitis. Deceased was cause of death is said to have been a single man but has some sisters living somewhere in this part of the state.

A small boy figured it out before his teacher as follows: If it takes 1 man, 12 days to build a house then 12 men can build it in 1 day and 288 men will build it in an hour, 17,280 in a minute, and 1,036,800 men will put it up in a second. Now, I don't believe they could build one brick in that time. Again, if one ship can cross the Atlantic in twelve days, twelve ships should be able to cross it in one day. I don't believe that either, so I'm not going to study mathmetics," and Johnny left the teacher studying it himself. —Dundee Adveriser.

The many friends of Dr. and Mrs. O. H. Schaleben will be interested in the following extracts from a letter written by Mrs. Schaleben Sept. 18, 1910 and just received Tuesday by Mrs. J. H. Caldwell. Mrs. Schaleben says in part: "I have wanted to write you all summer but don't know where the time has gone. Last spring seemed endless, the days were so long, but as soon as the canning boats got in and traffic began on the river we had all the strangers I could possibly entertain. Now we are having colder days and that cold whistling wind has been blowing a gale for two days, a fore-runner of snow and winter.

Winters in Koggning are very long and monotonous I declare, but this year I will not notice it much for we are planning to go out next fall to be gone the following winter. The children will be benefited by the change and I think we all will be. I need to see trains again as much as Gertrude Lee does I guess.

Dr. Schaleben has been making preparations to start on his long winter trip. A government schooner is expected at any time to take him away and if he goes now we will not see him again until about Jan. 1st, a long, long time is it not? In the states one could travel to Europe and return several times in the time it takes him to make this one trip. Last year he traveled over twelve hundred miles with dogs and deer and expects to cover even more ground this year.

How often I wish we could hear from him while he is away but there are no means of communication up here. He speaks of taking carrier pigeons with him this year so he can send us a message of his safe arrival.

There will be a great many changes in T. R. Falls by the time we get back. How much I shall enjoy visiting you again but there will be so many new faces I shall feel quite strange I know."

STEINER SCHOOL NOTES

Well here we are again. We have just overcome the efforts of the fine weather and are ready again to greet the spring and all our readers with a promise of more regular contributions hereafter.

Hattie Koglin visited our school last Friday afternoon.

Inga Sangen is back again after two months of illness.

We are glad to see Evelyn Sangen back after a long absence on account of the bad roads.

State examinations were given in our school Monday and Tuesday and the primary and intermediate grades had vacations. The results of the examinations were good the local standings on most of the papers averaging above 65 per cent but no papers were forwarded to the state that did not obtain an average of 80 per cent or more, as by sending in a paper now the rights of sending in another in June would be forfeited. The papers forwarded were: Augusta and Sarah Swanson's and Lizzie Furstnau's in History and, Amy Whitman's in Geography. We are now working harder than ever preparing for the County examinations which come the last week in April.

We were glad to see our school house scrubbed last Saturday. "That cleanliness is next to Godliness" is a maxim that would well be worth more common practice in our rural schools. It is the first step to promoting the good health of both body and mind.

Lena Riedle was absent from school last week on account of work.

The ice now a days is very tempting and we find it worth while to brave the danger of getting a ducking if we can only get a good slide. We are glad as long as it freezes hard enough to keep the roads in good condition.

Louise and Ella Meyer were absent from school last Friday.

Its too bad that we are not studying physics for we have a work shop in our yard where we can study machinery. We do not object to such pleasant neighbors.

MINNESOTA HOUSE CENSURES MEMBER

Admits Improper Remarks but Refuses to Retract.

St. Paul, March 28.—The house members spent all day in a spectacular row over the Klemer incident. F. L. Klemer, during a speech last Wednesday, had stated that the committees of the house are "packed in the interest of the special interests."

During the course of the proceedings Mr. Klemer apologized for his unparliamentary remarks; the house voted to censure him; he asked that his resolution calling for the appointment of a committee to investigate his charges be reported to the house; the members voted to require him to appear before the bar of the house and state his charges then and there; he appeared and stated that he was not prepared to make a definite statement; the house then voted to excuse him.

His request for the appointment of an investigating committee went over under notice of debate. The net result of the day's work was that, aside from fireworks, not much was accomplished except to demonstrate that sentiment among the members is strongly with the speaker and against the notion that there is any foundation for the allegation that the committees are packed.

The resolution of censure was adopted by a vote of 66 to 42.

One employers' liability bill has been disposed of. The house indefinitely postponed the Gillette measure on that subject. The judiciary committee returned the bill with an unfavorable recommendation and the report was adopted without comment.

MESSENGER BOYS ROBBED

New York Bandits Go After Small Game.

New York, March 28.—A trio of masked men invaded the financial district, lined eleven messenger boys against the wall in the dressing room of the Western Union Telegraph company's office in Wall street and took from them their week's wages. A clerk who rushed in to learn the cause of the commotion was marched to the head of the line and searched too.

Burned to Death in Box Car.

Morton, Minn., March 28.—A farm hand who has been working in this vicinity for some weeks past was burned to death in a box car. He had been drinking heavily for several days and crawled into the car to sleep. The only clew to his identification was a peculiar pocket knife in the ruins of the fire. He went by the name of Doyle and hailed from New Jersey. The man was about thirty years old.

THREE COACHES GO INTO RIVER

Serious Disaster on the Atlantic Coast Line.

Ocilla, Ga., March 26.—At least twelve persons were killed and more than a dozen injured when the Dixie flyer on the Atlantic Coast Line, running between Chicago and Jacksonville, Fla., was wrecked on a trestle over the Alapaha river near here.

The first and second class coaches and the first Pullman sleeper went into the river, carrying away about 400 feet of the trestle.

The wreck was caused by the breaking of an axle on the engine midway of the long trestle.

The coaches in the river are about ten feet under water and it is said the list of dead may be increased when the debris is cleared. Twelve bodies have been recovered. The injured were brought here and later sent to the Atlantic Coast Line hospital at Waycross, Ga.

"But one day old Glass woke up and got one of his eyes open. And when he saw how things stood he swore he would live merely for the sake of killing his false friend. He crawled to a spring close by, where he found a bush of ripe bullberries. He waited

CARRY WAR TO DECISIVE ISSUE

Rebels Perfecting Plans to Overthrow Government.

SNUB OVERTURES FOR PEACE

Madero Anxious to Show Widespread Extent of Revolution and Win Recognition of Nations.

El Paso, Tex., March 28.—"The insurrectos are organizing their forces, drilling their men, providing them with ample ammunition and distributing stores with a view of carrying on the war to a decisive issue. No attention whatever is being paid to the so called overtures for peace. Madero is anxious to show the widespread extent of the revolution and thus to win recognition of belligerency from all the nations."

This information was given out by the revolutionary junta here as coming from Francisco I. Madero, the so called president of the insurrectos. It was said that Madero in recent messages to the junta was eager to obtain from foreign governments an official recognition that a state of war existed in Mexico. One object, it was pointed out, was that in the event the insurrectos captured a border town it would obviate complications with a foreign country by enabling them to appoint provisional consular agents.

SUCCESSOR TO DE LA BARRA

Senor E Inclan New Mexican Ambassador to Washington.

Mexico City, March 28.—Coincident with the official announcement of a new Diaz cabinet came that of the appointment of Manuel de Zacamacona E Inclan as ambassador to the United States, succeeding Francisco Leon de la Barra.

At the same time the resignation of Miguel Macedo as subsecretary of the department of the interior became known. In the cabinet as announced the office of secretary of the interior was left vacant.

The cabinet as at present constituted follows: Foreign relations, Francisco Leon de la Barra; justice, Demetrio Sodi; public instruction, Jorge Vera Estanol; fomento (promotion of commerce), Manuel Marroquin y Rivera; communications and public works, Norbeto Dominguez; finance, Jose Yves Limantour; war and marine, General Manuel Gonzalez Cosio.

REBELS FORCED TO RETREAT

Lose Thirty-six Killed in Battle With Federals.

Agua Prieta, Mex., March 25.—Thirty-six rebels and eight federals are dead as the result of a nine-hour battle at La Colorado, south of Hermosillo, according to an official report received here. The rebels had possession of the town but after hard fighting were driven out.

It is believed now that the town of Hermosillo is safe from attack, as the routing of the rebel forces from La Colorado will deter Juan Cabral's band of 250 rebels, which had been maneuvering to enter La Colorado.

The united rebel force had contemplated an attack on Hermosillo.

AMERICANS WERE NOT SLAIN

Reports Sent Out From Agua Prieta Had No Foundation.

Agua Prieta, Sonora, Mex., March 25.—There is no truth in reports sent from this vicinity that four Americans, captured with the insurrectos during the recent battle here, were executed by the Mexican authorities.

BANKERS WON'T GET PARDONS

Unfavorable Action Expected in Morse and Walsh Cases.

Washington, March 28.—From sources close to the president it was learned that the pardon appeals of the two convicted bankers, Charles W. Morse of New York and John R. Walsh of Chicago, undoubtedly will be denied. It is stated that the attorney-general's recommendations in both cases is adverse and that the president will follow its findings.

SLAV TROOPS REACH CHINA

Large Detachment of Russians Invade Ili Province.

London, March 28.—A large column of Russian cavalry and infantry has already invaded the Ili province of Chinese Turkestan, according to advices received here by a private Chinese society. The commander of the column, it is stated, refused to allow caravans to pass.

Guilty of Misusing Mails.

Cincinnati, March 24.—William P. Harrison, millionaire head of the World Manufacturing company and a number of subsidiary concerns, was found guilty in the United States court of using the mails to defraud.

Duncan Smoked in Church.

Sir Walter Scott in his "Heart of Midlothian" refers to one Duncan of Knockdunder, an important personage, who smoked during the whole of the sermon from an iron pipe tobacco borrowed from other worshipers. We are told that at the end of the discourse he knocked the ashes out of his pipe, replaced it in his sporran, returned the tobacco pouch to its owner and joined in the prayer with decency and attention.

Former Mayor of Cleveland Reported Steadily Sinking.

TOM JOHNSON IS SINKING

Rumors in Cleveland That the End Is Near.

Cleveland, March 28.—Reports concerning the condition of Tom L. Johnson were conflicting and no direct statement was issued from the sick room. One report in general circulation and apparently confirmed by friends was that the former mayor was sinking and that the end was near.

Others maintained that Mr. Johnson's condition was about the same or, if anything, a little better.

ALL ON BOARD GO DOWN WITH VESSEL

Twenty-six Lives Lost on the Pacific Coast.

Victoria, B. C., March 27.—The British Columbia Shipping company's little wooden steamer Sechelt, built for passenger service on an inland lake, turned turtle in a furious gale off Beechey Head, Vancouver Island, and went down with all on board, twenty-two passengers and the crew of four men. Thirteen passengers had landed at William Head just before the steamer went out to destruction. Most of the passengers were railroad laborers bound for a Canadian Northern construction camp, but a few were residents of Sooke.

PLACING BLAME FOR HOLOCAUST

New York Authorities Probing Factory Fire Horror.

GRAND JURY MEN TAKE HAND

District Attorney's Staff, Fire Marshal, Coroner, State Labor Department and Borough President of Manhattan Gathering Information—Grand Jury Resolution Declares Some One Should Be Prosecuted for Disaster.

New York, March 28.—The fixing of the blame for the loss of 142 lives in the Washington square fire of Saturday drew to a focus the energies of the district attorney's staff, the fire marshal, the coroner, the state labor department and Borough President McAneny of Manhattan. Dozens of investigators collected every scrap of available information. Grand jury men turned personal probers and an additional grand jury, in a formal resolution presented to the court of general sessions, offered their aid to the district attorney and declared that some one should be prosecuted for the disaster.

What the probers found—evidence that doors at exits swung inward, the crumpled fire escape in the airshaft, the one fire escape blocked by iron shutters when opened, an empty water tank on the roof and the practice prevalent among cutters of lighting cigarettes a few minutes before quitting time—all this and what is yet to be ferreted out will be placed speedily before the grand jury for action, District Attorney Whitman announced.

The tenement house department summoned owners of half a dozen faulty structures to police court as a preliminary step to a farreaching investigation of tenements.

Fire Marshal Beers said he was convinced that a cigarette, lit by a cutter and thrown in a heap of clippings, had started the fire.

A relief fund for the sufferers is headed by a $5,000 donation from Andrew Carnegie. The United Hebrew charities, the Austrian Hebrew Free Burial association and other organizations came to the fore with aid.

Thirty-three bodies, most of them shorn of all semblance to human form, lie unidentified at the charities pier morgue. Twelve persons, most of them girls in their teens, are fighting for life in hospitals. The unidentified will be buried in a single grave, but will be held as long as possible to give relatives and friends an opportunity to claim them.

Latest figures place the death list at 141. Of these 133 bodies were taken from the scene of the disaster and nine died in hospitals. The list will be swelled, surgeons say, by others, who, still living, have no chance to recover.

SEVERE ELECTRICAL STORM

Great Damage Occurs at Philadelphia and Vicinity.

Philadelphia, March 28.—A severe electrical storm, accompanied by a high wind which at times blew with cyclonic force, swept over the northern section of this city, leaving destruction and death in its wake.

Buildings were demolished, houses unroofed and the New York division of the Pennsylvania railroad was placed out of commission temporarily by the demolition of its tower at Holmesburg and station at Tacony, cutting off all telegraphic communication.

The police station at Tacony was demolished. At the Tacony station of the Pennsylvania railroad an unidentified man was killed when a portion of the structure was blown away. Many houses in this section were unroofed or completely demolished.

In the manufacturing section of Kensington, in the northeast, toward Tacony, several factories were destroyed.

TRIAL TO LAST SIXTY DAYS

About Five Hundred Witnesses in Cowan Impeachment.

Bismarck, N. D., March 28.—That Judge Cowan's impeachment will hold the North Dakota senate in session for sixty days is the opinion freely expressed in Bismarck after it became known that the prosecution had subpoenaed 197 witnesses and that there would be from fifty to seventy-five more witnesses subpoenaed. In addition there will be the defendant's witnesses and the total number will not be far from 500, all told.

Dies on Way to Fire.

Minneapolis, March 28.—Frank Pearson of the Minneapolis fire department, the hero of the Peck wall disaster in December, 1905, when at the risk of his own life he saved several others, died at his post of heart failure, succumbing on the hose wagon while the horses were dashing to a fire.

Five Perish in Blaze.

Sleepwalking.

Somnambulism has been a mystery and a matter of discussion to the medical profession since the days of the ancients. They knew as well as we all now know that there is such a thing as somnambulism, or walking in the sleep. They attempted to explain it just as modern medical science has been endeavoring to explain it ever since. But as it was then so it is now. There are so many explanations that even the physician is puzzled to decide which to accept.

NEW YORK CAUCUS FRUITLESS

Sheehan Receives Less Than One-third of Democratic Votes.

Albany, N. Y., March 28.—The second Democratic legislative caucus failed to select a candidate for United States senator and was called to reconvene tonight. Twenty-five candidates were voted for, William F. Sheehan leading, with a vote of 26, less than a third of those taking part. Those receiving the next highest votes were Augustus Van Wyck, 7; John J. Fitzgerald, 6; Isador Straus, 5; Daniel F. Cohalan, 4. Governor Dix received one ballot. Ninety of the 116 Democratic members of the legislature answered the roll call.

The general opinion is that a Democratic senator will be elected in time to take his seat when the extraordinary session of congress convenes.

EXPRESS STRIKE IS ENDED

Employes Decide They Have No Chance to Win Fight.

New York, March 24.—The strike against the Adams Express company, which indirectly affected the Wells-Fargo and United States companies, was declared off at a meeting of the strikers.

Mayor Gaynor had previously notified the strikers that policemen would acompany all wagons.

Before declaring the strike off a committee of the Adams Express company's men called on the general agent and asked what terms would be given the men if they returned to work. They were informed that the company would treat with the men as individuals only. When the committee reported the strike was called off.

TORTURED FOR 15 YEARS by a cure-defying stomach trouble that baffled doctors, and resisted all remedies he tried, John W. Modders, of Moddersville, Mich., seemed doomed. He had to sell his farm and give up work. His neighbors said he can't live much longer. "Whatever I ate distressed me," he wrote, "till I tried Electric Bitters, which worked such wonders for me that I can now eat things I could not take for years. Its surely a grand remedy for stomach trouble." Just as good for the liver and kidneys. Every bottle guaranteed. Only 50 cents at all Druggists.

THE DAY OF THE TRUMP

By M. QUAD

Copyright, 1910, by Associated Literary Press

One evening after supper Silas Wiggs picked up his hat off the floor and walked out of the house without a word. Mrs. Wiggs did not ask where he was going. [illegible] every week day night [illegible] Silas had gone [illegible] to loaf and gab [illegible] Every night [illegible] at the postoffice, [illegible] received a shake of [illegible]

On this evening, however, Silas did something he had never done before. He stopped for a moment to look at his wife and children, as if bidding them farewell.

Mr. Wiggs had come to be forty-eight years old. He had worked all his life. He hadn't broken his back at it, but he had done fairly well for a man who hated work. There were days when he was hoeing corn for some one for $1 a day that he got so mad he jumped up and down and whooped. He wanted to take life easy, but he couldn't. He wanted to have a whole sack of flour and three pounds of butter ahead of the appetite of the family and then go fishing, but the day had never come.

Neither the village postoffice nor the grocery nor the drug store saw Silas that evening nor for many long evenings to come. It was remarked that something must have happened to him. Something had. On leaving the house he had walked in the opposite direction from the village. He had walked all night and all the next day. In fact, he kept on walking until he was 100 miles away. Then he stopped and got work in a hotel barn for a few weeks. He finally found the man he was looking for, and after several interviews with him Silas put fifty more miles between him and home. Then he sat down in a hamlet in the midst of a rich farming community and got his breath. As soon as rested he announced himself as Elijah, the prophet. He had come there to warn sinners and all others that the last trump was about to sound. He set the day for it to sound. The date had been given him in a dream.

Silas' hair hung down to his shoulders, and he had a venerable appearance and a deep voice. No one around there had ever seen a prophet, but it wasn't long before everybody was agreed that Silas at least looked like one. At first he was laughed at and ridiculed, but that only made him the more earnest. He spoke from the steps of the tavern, and he went from house to house and from farm to farm. He spoke to the women more than to the men. In two weeks he had half a dozen of them with him. Then he found male converts. This was in May. The last trump was to sound on the 4th of August.

In four weeks two-thirds of the population of a county were converts. In six weeks there were only a few outsiders. The weekly papers scoffed at Silas and his dreams and predictions, but he silenced them by asking, "How do you know that this thing won't come to pass?" They didn't know it. They couldn't declare it impossible. They couldn't sneer at the last trump business without offending their Christian subscribers. It was the same with lawyers and doctors. They jumped on Silas to jump off again.

"You believe there is a heaven, don't you?" he would ask.

"Oh, yes."

"Ever been there?"

"Of course not."

"Ever see any one who had?"

"No."

"Then why do you believe?"

"Because the Bible says so."

"But it also says there shall be a judgment day."

"Yes, but why on the 4th of August?"

"Why on any day? Why not on that day as well as another?"

"If the last trump is to sound what of our property?"

"It will be destroyed with the earth, of course," was the reply.

That suited some, but not the majority.

All day on the 3d of August the county held its breath. Farmer and villager put on clean shirts and did no work. It was said that children forgot to cry and that never a rooster crowed. Hundreds of people sat up all that night, going to their doors now and then to consult the heavens.

On the morning of the 4th there was a gathering on hills and knolls and a farewell shaking of hands. People spoke in whispers, and husbands and wives held hands. It was so up to 10 o'clock, to noon, to midafternoon, to sundown. Then Silas Wiggs stood up and said to the people around him:

"It has not come and we will disperse, but to hold ourselves in readiness for a week yet. It may be that Gabriel has mistaken the date."

Did they swarm for him? Did they bring out a rail and tar and feathers? Did they go to the courts and cast him into jail? Nothing of the kind for Silas Wiggs. They allowed that there was a mistake somewhere, but it might be Gabriel's fault instead of Mr. Wiggs'. He hung around for a week and then withdrew by daylight, as an honest man should. He said he would dream again and try and have the thing come off on time.

Silas hasn't worked any since. He doesn't have to. His share of the plunder permits him to go fishing all the time, and he never comes home empty handed.

Declares Japan Attaches No Importance to War Stories.

TAFT REGRETS WAR STORIES

Ambassador Says Japan Attaches No Importance to Them.

Washington, March 24.—President Taft had a cordial interview with the Japanese ambassador, Baron Uchida. The president sent for the baron to felicitate with him upon the ratification of the new treaty between this country and Japan.

President Taft expressed pleasure at the opportunity to set at rest the stories which have been published during the last two weeks that back of the administration's action in sending troops to the Mexican border was a motive of precaution against some expected treacherous act by Japan.

He expressed regret that such "malicious stories," as he called them, should gain circulation.

Baron Uchida is said to have assured the president that he attached no importance to the reports and had discovered that they emanated from irresponsible sources.

SIX FIREMEN PERISH IN MILWAUKEE BLAZE

Roof on Which They Were Standing Collapses.

Milwaukee, March 25.—Six f[illegible]ers are dead, four others dying [illegible] emergency hospital and several o[illegible] suffering from more or less serious injuries, the result of the caving in of the roof of the building of the Middleton Manufacturing company, wholesale hatters.

The fire had been burning half an hour and between fifteen and twenty men had been fighting the flames from the roof of the four-story structure when suddenly there was a creaking and swaying of the upper portion and before the firemen had a chance to hurry away the roof collapsed, carrying them through to the basement.

A number of the firemen were buried in the debris, while others were lucky and escaped through basement windows.

Ambulances were hurried to the scene and as quickly as possible the dead and injured were dug out of the ruins.

PACKERS MUST FACE TRIAL

Federal Judge Holds Immunity Doesn't Apply to Present Charges.

Chicago, March 23.—The indicted Chicago packers lost their fight against going on trial on the indictments secured by the government several months ago when Judge Carpenter, in the United States district court, overruled their demurrer to the charges and held that the immunity granted by Judge Humphrey of the federal circuit court in 1906 did not apply to the present charges, which, he held, were based on evidence not included in the Humphrey decision.

Judge Carpenter's decision occupied nearly an hour in reading and went into the controversy relating to immunity with great detail.

SCORES PERISH IN GOTHAM FIRE

BUILDING VERITABLE FIRETRAP

With Exits Cut Off Many Leap to Street and Are Crushed to Death.

New York, March 25.—One hundred and forty-eight persons—nine-tenths of them girls from the East Side—were crushed to death on the pavements, smothered in smoke or shriveled crisp in a factory fire this afternoon in the worst disaster New York has known since the steamship General Slocum was burned to the water's edge off North Brothers island in 1904.

Nearly all, if not all, of the victims were employed at the Triangle Waist company on the eighth, ninth and tenth floors of a ten-story loft building at 23 Washington place on the western fringe of the downtown wholesale clothing, fur and millinery district. The partners of the firm, Isaac Harris and Max Blanck, escaped unscathed from the office on the tenth floor, carrying with them over an adjoining roof Blanck's two young daughters and a governess. There was not an outside fire escape on the building.

How the fire started will perhaps never be known. A corner on the eighth floor was its point of origin and the three upper floors only were swept. On the ninth floor fifty bodies were found; sixty-three or more persons were crushed to death by jumping and more than thirty clogged the elevator shafts. The loss to property will not exceed $100,000.

The building stands on a corner, with exposure on two sides, but the only fire escape was interior, opening on a light and air shaft. In all there were seven exits—the single fire escape, two freight elevators at the rear, two passenger elevators in front and two stairways.

Exits Practically Useless.

All of them proved almost useless and practically all who escaped either climbed to the roof and scrambled thence to the roof of the building occupied by the American Book company adjoining, or fled in the first rush for safety before the crush and the smoke grew too thick.

The building stands tonight with shell intact and barely scarred—rather only smudged; the partitions of architectural tiling between floor and floor are sound and it is impossible for one who did not see it to imagine how the flames in so short space could have wrought such havoc. Seven hundred hands, 500 of them women, were employed by the shirtwaist company. They sat in rows at their whirring machines, the tables before them piled with flimsy cloth, the floor littered with lint, the air itself full of flying, inflammable dust. The first rush of flame was almost an explosion. Operators died in their chairs, their lungs seared by inhaling flame. Others were crowded into the elevator shafts after the cars had made their last trip. Still others were pushed off the inadequate interior fire escape.

In such a horrible stream did the bodies overflow from the windows that the firenets, stretched by the first company to arrive, were soon gorged beyond capacity. Twelve bodies weighted one net to the bursting point, but [illegible] bodies kept on tumbling to the [illegible]ment through meshes that could [illegible]nger support them.

A CHASE

By ELLA WHEATON

Copyright by American Press Association, 1911.

Mrs. Greatorix was a stepmother. Not all stepmothers, any more than all mothers-in-law, are bad, but Mrs. Greatorix was at least avaricious. She had no children of her own, but a stepdaughter. Moreover, the husband and father had died, leaving $100,000 to his widow and $200,000 to his daughter, Alice.

Alice was fifteen years old when her father died and, having no other home, remained with her stepmother. She feared her father's widow and would have been glad to get away from her, but she was too young to lay plans for such a purpose.

There was a clause in the Greatorix will that if Alice was not married by the time she was eighteen $50,000 of her fortune was to go to her stepmother. If she had no children at twenty-five another $50,000 was to go to her stepmother. Why Mr. Greatorix threw such a temptation in the way of his wife to keep his daughter unmarried does not appear. The most probable solution is that it was the result of a compromise—that the wife was claiming more and finally got this stipulation out of him.

Unfortunately for the stepmother's plans Alice must go to school. At the high school when she was seventeen she met a youth of eighteen, and between them there sprang up an attachment. Roger Ashurst called occasionally on Alice, but it didn't take him long to discover that he was obnoxious to the stepmother. Opposition is an excellent incentive to love, and Roger as soon as he left the high school and went into business began to lay plans to possess the girl. He found so much difficulty in courting [illegible]

Besides, Alice had told him of the whys and wherefores of the case, and he saw plainly that in order to help Alice he must obtain the legal rights of a husband.

As the girl approached the age of eighteen her stepmother began to watch her very closely—so closely, indeed, that she was unable to communicate with her lover, Mrs. Greatorix intercepting all her letters. Two weeks before Alice's eighteenth birthday she was locked up in her room. But one night as she was going to bed, hearing shot thrown against her window, she opened it, and a stone was thrown in to which was attached a note from Roger stating that he would watch for her aunt to go out and when she did he would enter the house and take her away.

A couple of days after this Alice was not especially surprised at her bedroom door being kicked open, and there stood Roger. Hastily putting on her hat and wraps, she went with him downstairs, got into an automobile and was starting when Mrs. Greatorix appeared, hurrying home.

A garage was located around the corner, and thither the stepmother ran, hired an auto and made chase. The fugitives had taken a broad avenue which was the most feasible outlet, and into this avenue Mrs. Greatorix ordered her chauffeur to proceed. She saw the auto in which her daughter was eloping—she recognized it by its color—just turning into a side street. For several minutes it was lost to her, but on turning into the side street she herself caught sight of it trying to pass a cab that stood in the way. While she looked the auto chugged past the hack and darted on at full pace.

When Mrs. Greatorix reached the vehicle that had blocked the way her chauffeur endeavored to pass it on the right, but at the moment the hack swerved to that side of the narrow street. The chauffeur moved to the left and the hack also turned to that side.

"Run him down!" cried Mrs. Greatorix. "He's in league with the elopers."

But when the chauffeur tried again to make a passage the hack drew out of the way and let him pass. The pursuing auto soon turned into another avenue, and Mrs. Greatorix, looking first in one direction, then in the other, saw the fugitive auto moving southward.

"There it is!" she cried. "Put on all your power."

They followed the auto twenty miles into the country, when it stopped suddenly.

"Now's your chance," she said to her chauffeur. "Don't let them get away."

But the chauffeur was obliged to slow up for the reason that the driver of the other machine got out to fix something. When Mrs. Greatorix pulled up beside him he was working with a monkey wrench. His auto was empty.

Mrs. Greatorix was so mad that she abused the fellow for leading her on a wild goose chase. He looked at her innocently, apparently not knowing what she was talking about. Then, not waiting for a rejoinder, she ordered her chauffeur to turn about and go back to the city.

Meanwhile the lovers had been married.

Mrs. Greatorix never knew their method of escape. Ashurst had not counted on her returning so soon. Expecting that she would follow, he directed his chauffeur to turn into a side street, and, seeing a hack standing by the curb, he got Alice out of the auto and into the hack only a moment before her stepmother turned into the street and offered the driver a ten dollar bill to drive him wherever he wished to go. When the pursuing auto came up he ordered the driver to stand in its way in order to throw the pursuers off the track.

Colored Hailstones.

Red hail is not unknown, even in Great Britain, for in May of 1885 there was quite a heavy fall of it at Castlewellan, in County Down. Red and white fell together, and the red hue was not merely on the surface of the pellets, but went through and through. When one was squeezed between the fingers it stained them.

At Minsk, in Russia, an even stranger hail shower had fallen five years before. Some of the pellets were ring shaped, and, while some were distinctly reddish, others were a bright blue. Some scientists declare that the coloring is due to various mineral salts.

A Feeling Allusion.

"I heard Uncle Joe talking about something he said he saw at the horse races, but I know better," confided the recently chastised small boy to his chum. "He saw 'em right here, and they're my ma and pa."

"What did he say?" asked the chum.

"He said he saw a spanking team."—Baltimore American.

How He Took It.

"In training," said an instructor in athletics, "the strictest obedience is required. Whenever I think of the theory of training I think of Dash, who after eighteen years of married life is one of the best and happiest husbands in the world.

"'Dash,' I once said to him, 'well, Dash, old man, how do you take married life?'

"'According to directions,' he replied."

Steel Pen Helps Forgers.

The crime of forgery has been facilitated and increased by the modern introduction of metallic pens, gold and steel, says a writer in the Indianapolis News. The old fashioned quill pen was smooth and pleasant to write with though it sometimes balked and sputtered, but it did not lend itself to skillful imitations as easily as the metallic pen does. The crime of forgery doubtless has been promoted by the almost universal education of modern times. In an age when everybody writes and when many are skillful penmen forgeries are much more frequent than they were centuries ago, when the person who could handle a pen was an exception. Many modern criminals make a living by committing forgeries, victimizing hotels, banks, capitalists and business men generally.

The Spit Snake.

There is a snake belonging to the small family causidae, inhabiting Africa, that is said to have the power of ejecting its venom to a short distance. This snake is called by the Dutch Boers "spuw slang," or spit snake. "I don't feel well," said one clerk to another as he took off his coat in the office. "The trouble with me is that I haven't slept as I ought. I don't feel well unless I've slept." "That's the same way with me," said his colleague. "In fact, I think I feel best of all when I'm sound asleep!"

Impaling the Wild Boar.

In Germany the boar hunt occurs annually. Trained hounds are held in leash until the lair of the boars is sniffed, and then they are let go. Off rush the bristling beasts. They run fast, and the faster they skip along the wilder and "madder" they get. Sometimes they are shot, but the correct style of killing is to use a long spear or a short, swordlike knife. The hunter spies his boarship speeding along in an almost straight line, blinded with rage and ferocity. Bending over sideways to the earth, the sportsman thrusts his spear dull end downward in the soil and the sharp point slanting upward and turned directly to the boar's path. Straight on the wild hog rushes, and with all the impetus of his long flight he plunges upon the spear point and there, impaled, dies a bloody death.

"This collar," said a furrier, "is sea otter skin, the costliest fur known. Silver fox, beside sea otter, is cheap. Where you would pay $1,000 for a silver fox skin you'd pay $2,000 for a sea otter. It is only the Russians, the world's greatest fur lovers, who go in for this most precious of all furs. They use it exclusively for coat collars. Why? For a strange reason, an almost incredible reason. Sea otter is the only fur on which the breath won't freeze."—Cincinnati Enquirer.

MINNESOTA TO BENEFIT BY PRACTICAL ADVERTISING OF GREAT NORTHERN RY

Followers of Minnesota's Industrial Progress Sure of Rush of Settlers Into This State During Coming Spring

The practical method undertaken by the Great Northern Railway of advertising Minnesota by bringing the products of our State before the homeseeking public of the East through the means of Agricultural Exhibits in the different large eastern cities—the last one being installed at 47 North High St., Columbus, Ohio—and the State Exhibition Car, is bound to result in directing those, who have a little money toward the purchase of farm land to make a new home, to Minnesota.

The itinerary of the Minnesota Car took it into Mendota, Ill., and the Reporter of that city spoke very highly through its columns of this visit and the benefit to be derived therefrom by Minnesota. The following extract is taken from that article:

"On Wednesday the car sent out by the state of Minnesota and the Great Northern Railroad Company was in Mendota and was open for the inspection of our citizens and the farmers of the neighboring community. The car was in charge of [illegible] F. Fullerton, as state representative, and is accompanied by W. S. Weber, Immigration Agent for the Great Northern, who did all in their power to show the products displayed to the best advantage to the visitors, who numbered over a thousand according to Mr. Fullerton's estimate. Too much credit can not be given to James J. Hill, head of the Great Northern, who, by furnishing the car and free transportation, materially aids Minnesota in showing her products to the rest of the United States.

In the car are displayed specimens of corn, small grain, fruit, vegetables, ore, and even stuffed game and fish and many other products of the state of Minnesota and it was well worth one's time to inspect the exhibits and thereby gain an idea of that state's fertility and natural resources. Many favorable comments were heard from visitors, and we believe the state of Minnesota will profit from this Mendota visit, especially with such a gentlemanly and competent representative as Mr. Fullerton."

By the practical demonstration of Minnesota's possibilities as an agricultural district and the distribution of local literature through the media of Agricultural Shows and the Exhibition Car, this state is bound to gain, and the value of this publicity can only be reckoned when the spring homeseeker movement is over and some idea can be had of the number of new settlers brought into the state.

THAT TERRIBLE CURSE "DRINK"

There is no man whose condition is so pitiable as the slave to the liquor habit. Excessive indulgence in drink destroys his reputation, undermines his health, paralyzes his intellect, vitiates his morals and ultimately makes him an object of loathing and contempt. His friends forsake him. He brings sorrow and disgrace upon everyone connected with him and drags his family down to misery and poverty. To get drink he squanders the money with which he should supply them. At the end, his children are in rags and dependent upon charity, and his sorrowing wife, old before her time, is condemned to a life of unremitting toil, to give the offspring of an unhappy marriage that support which drink deprives the husband of both the inclination and capacity to supply.

Mrs. Juliet Murray Lang.

But why enlarge on facts with which everyone is familiar? Drink is the great curse of our country and our age. Once a man becomes its victim there is usually little help for him through good resolutions or efforts to reform. Only extraneous aid can supply the remedy. There is such remedy, however, certain and unfailing. No matter to what depth the victim of the liquor habit has descended the JULIET MURRAY LANG INSTITUTE of St. Paul stands out as beacon light to a ship-wrecked mariner.

Remember it is never too late to mend. Go to the Juliet Murray Lang Institute and be cured from all desire for drink and you will be able forever afterward to show to the whole world that you are in very truth—a man.

A Merited Rebuke.

At the age of eighty-six Mme. Reynolds still found much zest in life, and, having retained all her faculties, she felt that a few of the physical disabilities of her age were of small account and portended nothing. Her nephew Thomas was a man of much worth, but of a certain tactlessness of speech, which always roused the ire of his aunt.

A few weeks before the old lady's eighty-seventh birthday Thomas, who had been overweighted with business cares for years, started on a trip round the world which was to consume two years.

"I've come to say goodby," he announced when he appeared at his aunt's house in a town fifty miles distant from his home. "I'm starting round the world next week, and as I'm to be gone two years and perhaps longer I thought I might not ever—well, you understand, I wanted to be sure to see you once more."

The old lady leaned forward, fixing him with her beadlike eyes.

"Thomas," she said imperatively, "do you mean to tell me the doctor doesn't think you'll live to get back?"—Youth's Companion.

ATTACKS SCHOOL PRINCIPAL.

A severe attack on school Principal Chas. B. Allen, of Sylvania, Ga., is thus told by him. "For more than three years," he writes "I suffered indescribable torture from rheumatism, liver and stomach trouble and diseased kidneys. All remedies failed till I used Electric Bitters, but four bottles of this wonderful remedy cured me completely." Such results are common. Thousands bless them for curing stomach trouble, female complaints, kidney disorders, billousness, and for new health and vigor. Try them. Only 50c at all Druggists.

The Arts of Asia.

It was Asia, through Arabia, which gave Europe the literature, the arts and the sciences which we have developed and of which we now boast. Gunpowder was probably invented in China. It was certainly introduced into Europe from Arabia. The finely tempered steel of Damascus went over from Arabia at the time of the Moorish invasion of Spain, and its manufacture was continued at Toledo. The coppersmiths of Bagdad supplied the world's market with their wonderful productions centuries before there were any industries in Europe. Weaving of silk and cotton had its birth as an industry in Arabia, and the weaving of wool was learned by the crusaders in the same wonderful country. Astronomy, mathematics, the mariner's compass—all came to us from the Arabs.—Argonaut.

The Tramp and the Dog.

Mrs. Suburb—Oh, my dear, that magnificent watchdog you brought home yesterday is gone!

Mr. Suburb—Eh? Did he break the chain?

"No, but an ugly looking tramp came around and acted so terribly that I let the dog loose, but instead of tearing the tramp to pieces he went off with him."

"Great snakes! It must have been the same tramp I bought him of!"—New York Weekly.

Might Spare a Few.

It is said that never was there a gentler critic than Dr. McClintock of Dickinson college. One day a young orator presented his speech for Dr. McClintock's approval. He evidently did not anticipate adverse criticism. He received it nevertheless, given in the doctor's gentle, humorous way, which never could offend.

"It's a good speech," he said, "but there is perhaps a little too much of a certain sort of rhetoric. For instance, I find in it two midnight owls, two midnight wolves, three American eagles and four unfurled banners. It seems to me that the supply exceeds the demand."

A Mighty Big Can.

An Irish harvester found himself in a small Scottish town. At the gas works he saw a gasometer for the first time in his life and stopped a countryman who was passing to ask, "What's that big round thing there standing on end?"

"Get out with you," said the Irishman. "You never saw a dinner can as big as that in your life."

PACKED COMMITTEES

Klemer Charge Substantiated. Twelve of Reactionaries Rule House

The Klemer charges that the House committee were packed for the special interests continues to be the chief topic of conversation about the capitol.

On Monday of last week Mr. Klemer apologized for the use of unparlimentary language, but refused to retract his statement of facts. Still rejecting his demand for a thorough investigation, the reactionary administration machine passed a vote of censure. In addition, Mr. Klemer and Dr. W. T. Stone, who had declared, as others had done, that Klemer spoke the truth, were suddenly and peremtorily ordered before the bar of the house, on a motion of Speaker Dunn, to state what committees were packed and by what members. Both Klemer and Stone refused to be bliffed, but offered to make their charges in writing and prove them, if given the machinery to investigate.

The administration forces, relying upon friendly newspapers to color the episode in their favor, refused to permit an impartial investigation. So far as special interest publications can accomplish that end. Mr. Klemer and Dr. Stone were censured and condemmed without a semblance of a trial.

I know districts in this state where the special interests indicated a friendliness toward the candidacy of certain statesmen by sending substantial contributions to aid in their election. Some of these checks were returned, after being photographed. Others were neither returned nor photographed. The brewery combine was obviously interested in the ... of Mr. Burnquist legislature can be divided into two classes—reactionary and progressives. The reactionaries, by opposing a larger scheme and scope of democracy, represent the special interests. It doesn't matte about their motive or compensation. Some reactionaries represent and serve special interests because they are honestly opposed to greater political power for the people. Others serve the interests ignorantly, being mere tools of the system. Most reactionaries are paid for their services—some in flattery, some in fulfilled ambitions, some in local appropriations, some in political preferment, some in business and professional opportunities, some in campaign expenses—it doesn't matter how. The point is that the reactionaries represent the special privilege class in politics.

An analysis of the House organization will convince any reasoning citizen that the Klemer—Stone charges are true. Twelve reactionary members were so placed on the important committees that they control legislation. The dozen men who have been intrusted by Speaker H. H. Dunn with this power are: L. D. Brown, Little Falls; C. A. Congdon, Duluth; Robert C. Dunn, Princeton; C. R. Fowler, Minneapolis; John G. Lennon, Minneapolis; George A. MacKenzie, Gaylord; L. C. Spooner, Morris; C. E. Stone, St. Paul; W. H. Wescott, West St. Paul; Harrison White, Luverne; Leonard Virtue, Blooming Prairie; Albert Pfaender, New Ulm.

The committee of which these dozen men have absolute control are three: Taxes and tax laws, where they have 10 of the 17 places; rules, where they have every one of the five places, and general legislation, where they have nine of 17.

On appropriations they have nine of 21, and on temperance five of 15, so that of the 75 places on these five most important committees, onetenth of the membership of the house has 38 places, or more than half of the whole committee strength.

On these same five committees, the most liberal construction of the word "progressive" could not muster more than 20 members out of the 75, and they are not in control of any one of these committees.

Compare these 12 now with 45 progressives. Messrs. J. J. Anderson, A. V. Anderson, Burnquist, Campbell Christie, Conley, Farley, Ferguson, Fisher, Harding, J. N. Johnson, Klemer, J. F. Lee, Lundeen, McMartin, Norton, W. I. Nolan, Nygren, A. J. Peterson, Putnam, Robinson, Rus-

Another group of 18 progressives, including Messrs. Crane, Davies, Davis, Frankson, Hillman, Holmberg, C. E. Johnson, J. T. Johnson, I. J. Lee, Lindberg, O'Neill, Orr, Palmer, J. E. Peterson, Rines, Skartum, Webb and Whiting, were given a total of only 32 places on the 10 most important committees.

Twelve leading reactionary lieutenants of Speaker Dunn have a total of 57 places on 10 most important committees, or an average of almost five to a committee, while 45 progressives have a total of 32 places on the 10 most important committees, or an average of much less than one to a committee.

Judging the membership of the house by their votes on questions like the initiative and referendum and other issues involving the rights and welfare of the people, the 10 leading committees were packed as follows:

Name of Com.	Reac.	Pro.
Rules	5	0
Appropriations	14	7
Taxes	13	4
Elections	12	5
Reapportionment	20	7
Temperance	10	5
General legislation	16	1
Railroads	15	4
Public lands	10	7
Public health and pure food	12	1
	127	51

In the daily newspapers' analysis of this suggestive situation the name of Mr. Rustad was ommitteh from the list of 27 leading progressives. This was due to the fact that his name and committes were left out of the little legislative manual from which the estimate was made. The people of Minnesota have never had a truer friend in the legislature than Mr. Rustad. He is experienced and absolutely dependable as a law maker No member is better equipped by conviction and inclination to serve the state, yet the House was so organized that Mr. Runstad and the other progressives have practically nothing to say about the legislation in its formative period.

Outside of the record in the Froshaug-Farrington contest the most significant vote cast by the Senate was the one killing the woman suffrage bill. It should be distinctly understood that this was not a vote on the question of equal suffrage, Coller, L. O. Cooke, Donaldson, Duea, Dunn, Dwinnell, Fosseen Glotzbach, Gunn, Hackney, Handland, Johnston, Klein, L'Herault, McGrath Marden, Murray, Pauly, Poehler, Pugh, Rockne, G. H. Sullivan, J. D. Sullivan, Swanson, Van Hoven, Wallace, Weis, Works.

Shorter Symtoms.

The next results of the session in fundamentally democratic reforms will be very small. The reactionary organization is directly responsible.

Representative Converse has secured a fish hatchery for his people. The story of his success will be fold later.

That was not the issue. The bill provided for a constitutional amendment giving to the people the opportunity to decide whether or not women should have the ballot. A vote against the Sageng bill, therefore, in the final analysis signified that thirty two senators did not believe in the rights or judgment of the people. The vote was as follows:

Against giving the people an opportunity to decide the question.—Ahmann, Anderson, Carpenter, Clau-

There is little evidence of team work between House and Senate. The House has passed the income tax amendment and a bill providing for the nomination of U. S. Senators by the people, neither of which reforms have been acted upon by the Senate at this time. The Senate has passed a bill extending the primary to state officers and also one providing for a recall, which are held up in the packed committees of the House.

MEETING AGAINST RECIPROCITY

Called by Legislators to meet at Old Capitol at St. Paul Tuesday, April 11th. at 10 a.m.

The subjoined call for a mass meeting of those opposed to the Canadian Reciprocity Treaty in its present form is sign by Senator A. L. Hanson and 29 other senators of our state legislature and by fortyone of the representatives. Farmers will do well to take heed, act quickly and send delegates. Farmers get so little consideration because they fail to act together. Following, is the wording of the call:

We, the undersigned, members of the State Legislature, being impressed with the seriousness and importance of the so-called Canadian Reciprocity Treaty, for the express ratification of which the president of the United States has called Congress in extraordinary session April 4th, 1911, and being farther impressed with the almost unanimous opposition to this Treaty in its present form that now appears to exist among the farmers of our state and the whole country, do hereby call a mass meeting of all citizens of this state, who are opposed to this Treaty in its present form, to be held at the Old State Capitol, in St. Paul, on Tuesday, April 11th, 1911, at 10 o'clock a. m.

All citizens of Minnesota who feel and believe that this Treaty, if ratified as it now stands, will inure to the disadvantage and injury of the agriculturist of our country in general, and of the Northwest in particular are urgently invited to be present at this meeting. We particularly urge that all local farmers' organizations such as Farmers' Elevator Companies, Co-operative and Township Insurance Companies and local unions of the American Society of Equality, and of Farmer's Clubs send delegat-

Fire Nearly Proves Fatal.

Fire broke out Wednesday morning in the dwelling of Iver Peterson on Conelly Av. on the East Side. Mrs. Peterson was badly burned about the face and hands, and their five-year old boy was very nearly suffocated. The kitchen part of the house was badly gutted.

It seems a pan of grease had been forgotten in the oven and, as the smell from it attracted attention and the oven door was thrown open the contents caught fire. In the excitment water was thrown on the fire and this virtually caused an explosion, throwing the burning grease all over Mrs. Peterson and the entire room. P. Neal Panabaker appeared on the scene at this juncture, or matters might have gone worse. In a "jiff" he put out the fire on the person of Mrs. Peterson and then by way of an upstairs window entered and rescued the little boy from his bed—apparently dead. But after being in the air a while the boy came to. In the meantime the fire bell had rung and the "fire laddies" now came upon the scene and quickly quenched the flames. A doctor was called and Mrs. Peterson was given much needed medical aid. We are glad to say: "No fatalities." But then, the way Mr. Panabaker handled a crowd of frantic women, they say, "was not slow."

THE SANGER FEST

June 23, 24, 25.

Brage chorus has been very fortunate in securing the famous Chicago singer Rolf Hammer as soloist at the Red River Valley Scandinavian Singing association's coming sangerfest at this place June 23, 24 and 25. His touring with the Christiania students in this country a few years ago as soloist speaks perhaps more than any thing else for his ability, but for the special benefit of the scandinavian public we give here the criticism over his last concert in Scandia Hall Chicago April 1st.

Det er altid en Fest at høre Rolf ... synge. Hr. Hammer er og ... magnetisk Sanger, som kan ... Publikum i Aande. Han ... forstaaelsesfuld Tolker af ... brogede Stemningsliv. ... ste Rangs Kunstner paa ... Omraade maa vaere i Be- ... af mange sjeldne Egenskab- ... maa ha en fin og lydhør ... attelse, aegte musikalsk Folelse, aetetisk Sans, god Stemme ikke at glemme, og hans Textbehandling maa paa det nærmeste være uden Plet og Lyde.

Hammer besidder disse Egenskaber i høi Grad. Den største Vanskelighed for en Sanger, nota bene en virkelig Sanger, er at levere Texten klar og tydelig og endnu at tilfredsstile Fordringerne til ægte, god Sang. For at kunne eie en fuldkommen, feilfri Diktion kræves der af Sangeren baade Aandens og Tungens Kultur.

"RED ACRE FARM"

Senior Class Play Very Good, and Well Interpreted; Greeted by Large Audience.

The Senior High School Class of thirty-six members did themselves proud at the Auditorium last Friday. They played to full houses both in the afternoon and in the evening, and played, not as novices and amateurs, but as professionals. They played with a confidence marvelous to see; with such insight, such interpretation as one would never look for in their years. All were so good it would be hard to say with confidence that this one or that one played better. Shortly, they will all be playing on the world stage. May they go at that with the same zest and determination.

The play itself was well chosen and drives home many a lesson well worth learning. Besides that, it is alive with action, intense with climaxes full of tragic significancy, and replete with bubbling comedy. It is full of the life of rural New England.

The cash receipts from the presentation of "Red Acre Farm," will go to defray graduation expenses and to purchase a class memorial for the Lincoln High school.

This play was also given in St. Hilaire last night where a goodly audience greeted the youthful players.

COMMUNICATION

Four years ago one of our present cityofficials ran on what he called the church ticket; two years ago he ran on the saloon ticket. He reminds me of the sinner who, when he came to die, was not sure which place he was going to, so he cried out: O good Lord; O good devil.

There is about two hundred men waiting to go to work as soon as the saw-mill opens. A great many of these men, in order to pass the time away, play a friendly game of cards in some saloon, but no money at stake. Now, there has been an ordinance dug up and enforced that says, no gambling allowed or slot machines. The poor laboring man must not play a friendly game of cards; he must stand up to the bar all the time so he can spend his money faster.

The state of Minnesota is a large state, but all the smart men of the state live in Thief River Falls. Whenever the legislature has a bill to pass, they send to Thief River Falls for a few of their prominent citizens to tell them what to do. Two of our wise citizens went to St. Paul last week to knock out a telephone bill before the legislature and came back and reported they had killed the bill; but the bill passed the House after they came back home. That don't make any difference, they must be paid their expenses. Lead on McDuff to the city treasury and d—d be he who first cries, hold, enough!

At the last meeting of the City Council it was moved and seconded that the committee of the White Elephant be discharged and the four barrels of white wash be charged up to the city. The manager of the White Elephant made a statement about three weeks ago that he was going to resign. Has any one seen his resignation or has anyone seen the statement of the amount of money taken in? No, man, no, and the automobile still runs. There is no use of him quitting the goose that lays the golden egg. "You whitewash me and I will white-wash you," is the motto. Say, Mr. Taxpayer, you did not think, when you voted for bonds to build this building that it was going to be owned and controlled by one man? The school entertainment got up by the children, they were charged twenty-five dollars for the use of this public building, built by the tax payers of the city for a public building. Charge the poor school children on a home play and give five or six hundred to an outside outfit to take money out of our city! I have heard of the man that would rob the widow and starve the orphan, but never the like of this.

Chas. Alexander.

THE GRAND

"The Grand" theatre opened yesterday. They are housed in the remodeled Bijou building on Main Av. North, and are equipped to show all of the best photoplays a-going. They also expect to put on from time to time some first-class vandeville shows. They made a start in this the first evening, the same troup to stay with them for four consecutive nights We understand they had a good attendance last night and were well received by the crowd present.

Anti-Tuberculosis Society Formed.

A number of our citizens gathered in Lincoln High School on Saturday night last to listen to an address by Mr. Christopher Easton on the subject of tuberculosis. At the close of the address a county organization was formed for the purposes of preventing and of curing the dread disease Work was planned of an educational and practical character. Exhibits loaned by the state society are to be used ing this dread disease, and interest in to desseminate information regarding the work throughout the country is to be aroused by the local organization.

The following officers were elected:

Rev. A. E. Mostue, President,
Dr. Mellby, Vice President,
Miss Emma Backe, Sec'y. & Treas.
Rev. Smith
Mrs. J. Bishop
Mr. Engelstad,
—Executive Committee.
Dr. Gambell
Dr. Vistaunet
Dr. Mellby,
—Membership Committee.

It was decided that the name of this association be the "Pennington Co. Anti-Tuberculosis Society."

A membership fee of twenty-five cents was charged. A number of people are already admitted as members, and everyone is sincerely invited to join our ranks and help us drive out this disease from our county.

We bespeak for this organization the hearty co-operation of all, and will be glad to aid the movement by publishing, from time to time, such information as may be furnished as to the most intelligent methods of dealing with this foe of humanity.

MRS. JAMES FONTAINE DEAD.

Mrs. James Fontaine died last Friday morning at the early age of 23 years, after a struggle of about 6 months against the dread "white plague." During the last three months she had been confined to her bed.

She leaves to mourn her untimely death a loving husband, relatives and friends in this city.

The funeral services were held last Monday from the Catholic church and the remains were laid to rest in the Catholic cemetery.

Thief River Falls, March 30, 1911.
The Modern Woodmen of America,
Thief River Falls, Minn.
Gentlemen:

Permit me to hereby acknowledge receipt of check for $2,000.00 as payment in full for life insurance policy which my beloved husband carried in your honorable lodge. I know how weak are words to express thanks for the many kindnesses you have shown us in the hour of our great breavement, and for the promptness in paying the policy after death, but I know you sympathize with us in our loss and will accept the simple word "Thanks" as a token of sincere appreciation. I wish the Modern Woodmen of America well, and wish to be

Yours very Sincerely,
Louise Rohbecke.

CONGRESS WITH EAR TO GROUND

Find Minnesota Farmers Solidly Against Proposed Trade Pact.

Washington, D. C., April 6, 1911.—Members of Congress have been home during the recess. They have been talking to their people and getting in close touch with the situation, especialy with respect to Canadian reciprocity. Minnesota representatives returning to Washington report that sentiment in that State is practically against the proposed trade agreement, This is universally true of the country districts. In the cities and towns sentiment is somewhat divided, they state, with public opinion shaping generally in opposition to the treaty.

Representative Lindbergh of Minnesota spent considerable time in his district during the recess. He returned to Washington a few days ago He reports that in Brainerd, which is the largest city in his district; sentiment is probably about evenly divided on the reciprocity question. In St. Cloud he estimates that about three-fourths are for it. In the villages he thinks that only about onefourth of the people favor the proposed agreement, while the country districts are solidly opposed, with here and there a farmer who favors it. But these are isolated cases, few and far between. In the opinion of Mr. Lindbergh fully two-thirds of the voters of his district are opposed to Canadian reciprocity, with the opposition steadily growing. He explains this growth of opposition to the fact that the proposed treaty has been discussed in the press and that as the people become familiar with it they are more and more impressed with the fact that if ratified it will be a bad thing for the State as a whole.

Senator Clapp continues to preach the gospel of popular government in and out of season. This does not mean that he is not devoting his attention to Canadian reciprocity, as has been insinuated in some quarters. The Junior Minnesota Senator has made some very clear statements defining his position on Canadian reciprocity, nothwithstanding the fact that it has been suggested that he has been trying to dodge this issue. These statements have been made public through the press. Senator Clapp stands opposed to the trade agreement in its present form, as does Senator Nelson. It looks as though there might be a move on foot to trip up the program of the National Progressive Republican League, of which Senator Clapp is an enthusiastic and aggressive supporter by trying to direct undue attention to Canadian reciprocity. It is an old trick of the interests to kick up the dust, in order to hide the real issue. Senator Clapp maintains that the popular government issue is one of vital importance and deep-rooted in principle. He would not side-track reciprocity, but he would give it its popular place, to be disposed of after proper and thorough discussion.

It is too early to predict what the House Republican Insurgents will do during the extra session. That they have something up their sleeves is aparent. A recent meeting of the progressive Republicans was held for the purpose of discussing plans of action. The progresives will be stronger now than ever before. With the incoming new members, who took their seats April 4, the strength of the Republican progressives is anywhere from 60 to 75. By combining with the House progressive Democrats in matters of legislation they will control the situation and hold the balance of power. There will doubtless arise situations where it will be possible as well as desirable for combinations of this sort to be made. For one thing the schedule by schedule revision of the tariff, which is promised by the House Democratic leaders, will afford an opportunity for the Republican Degressives to do good work. The reactionary element in the Democratic House membership will probably put obstacles in the way of progressive tariff revision, just as did the reactionary crowd in the House Republicans.

The Minnesota Wool Growers Association, with headquarters at Farmington, Minnesota, is calling the attention of Minnesota members of Congress to the inequalities of Schedule K. known as the wool schedule of the Payne-Aldrich bill. The association asserts that the middle west is discrimated against and that the manufacturers of woolen goods are becoming wealthy, by reason of the working out of the law. The association is trying to encourage the wool-growing industry in Minnesota but is having up-hill work of it. It was founded that the American Woolen Company, with its thirty-five woolen and worsted mills, have by the clever aid of forced consignment houses succeeded in keeping the United States the lowest market in the world for over a year. It is declared that some of the oldest and largest dealers in Minnesota have loaded their wool on the cars and then not been able to make delivery. It has been estimated the past year that the cost of producing a pound of Minnesota wool was about 21-1½ cents. Many wool growers have been obliged to let their clip go for 18 cents and even as low as 15 cents. The Washington law-makers are held reponsible for this state of affairs and it is declared that if the Minnesota wool growers are obliged to sell their clip at a loss, as they have been doing, the sheep industry of the North Star State and of the country as a whole, will soon vanish.

TRAP SEASON ENDS APRIL 15.

Illegal to Either Spear or Use Line in Catching Pike This Month.

It has been announced by Deputy Game Warden S. C. Bailey that the winter trapping season will close on Wednesday April 15, and that if any trappers are found operating after that date they will be prosecuted to the limit.

Another item which may be of interest to the sportsman is the fact that no pike may be either speared or caught with aline during the present month, as they are considered by the state game and fish commission as not being rough fish, and only rough fish may be caught during the present month.

If there is one enterprise on earth that a "quitter" should leave severely alone it is advertising. To make a success of advertising, one must be prepared to stick to it like a barnacle to a boat's bottom. There are three ways to make advertising pay, and these are the only ways: There are no others. First, is to keep at it; second, is to keep at it; third, is to keep at it.—John Wanamaker.

Finally this was of no avail, they did the only thing left for them to do—went into the caboose to wait till the train should come back from Thief River Falls to get them.

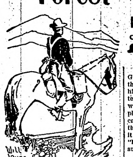
Cavanagh, Forest Ranger

The Great Conservation Novel

By HAMLIN GARLAND

Copyright, 1910, by Hamlin Garland



"She'll be in the other house, and, besides, she'd feel easier if you are in my place. She's all wrought up by the attack on you."

Ross turned to his prisoners. "Follow Mrs. Wetherford and—eyes front!"

"You needn't worry about me," said Joe. "I won't run."

"I don't intend to give you a chance," replied Ross.

Edwards seemed to have lost in both courage and physical stature. He slouched along with shuffling step, his head bent and his face pale. Ross was now profoundly sorry for him, so utterly craven and broken was his look.

As Ross brought his two prisoners to the Wetherford House Lee was waiting on the porch of the hotel, tense with excitement, straining her ears and eyes to see what was taking place.

The night had started with a small sickle of moon, but this had dropped below the range, leaving the street dark save where the lights from the windows of the all night eating houses and saloons lay out upon the walk, and while she stood peering out the sound of rancorous howling and shrill whooping came to her ears with such suggestion of ferocity that she shivered.

A few of the hotel guests had gone to bed, but the women were up, excited and nervous, starting at every fresh outburst of whooping, knowing that their sons or husbands were out in the street "to see the fun" and that they might meet trouble.

At last Lee discerned her mother returning from Halsey's, followed by three men. Withdrawing from the little porch whereon she had been standing, she re-entered the house to meet her mother in the hall. "Where is Mr. Cavanagh?" she asked.

"Out in the dining room. You see, Mike Halsey is no kind of use. He vamoosed and left Ross down there alone with his two prisoners and the lights likely to be turned out on him, so I offered the caffy as a calaboose. They are sure in for a long and tedious night."

Lee was alarmed at her mother's appearance. "You must go to bed. You look ghastly."

"I reckon I'd better lay down for a little while, but I can't sleep. Ross may need me. There isn't a man to help him but me, and that loafer Ballard is full of gall. He's got it in for Ross and will make trouble if he can."

"What can we do?"

"Shoot!" replied Lize, with dry brevity. "I wouldn't mind a chance to plug some of the sweet citizens of this town. I owe them one or two."

With this sentence in her ears Lee Virginia went to her bed, but not to slumber. Her utter inability either to control her mother's action or to influence that of the mob added to her uneasiness.

The singing, shouting, trampling of the crowd went on, and once a group of men halted just outside her window, and she heard Neill Ballard noisily, drunkenly arguing as to the most effective method of taking the prisoners.

"Come on, boys!" said Ballard, his voice filled with reckless determination. "Let's rush him."

As they passed the girl sprang up and went to her mother's room to warn her of the threatened attack.

Lize was already awake and calmly loading a second revolver by the light of the electric bulb. A jarring blow was heard. "Hear that? They're breaking in!" said Lize. She started to leave the room.

Lee stopped her. "Where are you going?"

"To help Ross. Here!" She thrust the handle of a smaller weapon into Lee's hand. "Ed Wetherford's girl ought to be able to take care of herself. Come on!"

With a most unheroic horror benumbing her limbs, Lee followed her mother through the hall. The sound of shouts and the trampling of feet could be heard, and she came out into the restaurant just in time to photograph upon her brain a scene whose significance was at once apparent. On a chair between his two prisoners and confronting Ballard at the head of a crowd of frenzied villains stood the ranger, a gleaming weapon in his hand, a look of resolution on his face. What he had said or what he intended to do she did not learn, for her mother [illegible] at the invaders with the mad bravery of a she bear. "Get out of here!" she snarled, thrusting her revolver into the very mouth of the leader.

They all fell back in astonishment and fear.

Ross leaped to her side. "Leave them to me!" he said. "I'll clear the room."

"Not on your life! This is my house. I have the right to smash the fools." And she beat them over the heads with her pistol barrel.

Recognizing that she was minded to kill, they retreated over the threshold, and Ross, drawing the door close behind them, turned to find Lee Virginia confronting Edwards, who had attempted to escape into the kitchen. The girl's face was white, but the eye of her revolver stared straight and true into her prisoner's face.

With a bound Ross seized him and flung him against the wall. "Get back there!" he shouted. "You must take your medicine with your boss."

The old fellow hurriedly replaced his ragged hat and, folding his arms, sank back into his chair with bowed head, while Lize turned upon Joe Gregg. "What did you go into this kind of deal for? You knew what the game laws was, didn't you? Your old dad is all for state regulation, and here you are breaking a state law. Why don't you stand up for the code like a sport?"

Joe, who had been boasting of the smiles he had drawn from Lee, did not relish this tongue lashing from her mother; but, assuming a careless air, he said. "I'm all out of smokes; get me a box, that's a good old soul."

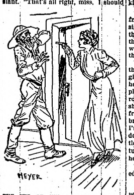
Lize regarded him with the expression of one nonplused. "You impudent little cub!" she exclaimed. "What you need is a booting!"

The ranger addressed himself to Lee. "I want to thank you for a very opportune intervention. I didn't know you could handle a gun so neatly."

She flushed with pleasure. "Oh, yes, I can shoot. My father taught me when I was only six years old."

As she spoke Ross caught the man Edwards studying them with furtive glance, but upon being observed he resumed his crouching attitude, which concealed his face beneath the rim of his weather worn hat. It was evident that he was afraid of being recognized. He had the slinking air of the convict, and his form, so despairing in its lax lines, appealed to Lee with even greater poignancy than his face. "I'm sorry," she said to him, "but it was my duty to help Mr. Cavanagh."

He glanced up with a quick sidewise slant. "That's all right, miss. I should have had sense enough to keep out of this business." He spoke with difficulty, and his voice was hoarse with emotion.



THE EYE OF HER REVOLVER STARED STRAIGHT INTO HER PRISONER'S FACE.

Lize turned to Lee. "The doc said 'no liquor,' but I guess here's where I draw one. I feel faint."

Ross hurried to her side, while young Gregg tendered a handsome flask. "Here's something."

Lize put it away. "Not from you. Just reach under my desk, Ross; you'll find some brandy there. That's it," she called as he produced a bottle. Clutching it eagerly, she added, "They say it's poison, but it's my meat tonight." Little remained of the woman in Lize, and the old sheep herder eyed her with furtive curiosity.

"I was afraid you'd shoot," Lize explained to Ross, "and I didn't want you to muss up your hands on the dirty loafers. I had the right to kill. They were trespassers, and I'd 'a' done it too."

"I don't think they intended to actually assault me," he said, "but it's a bit discouraging to find the town so indifferent over both the breaking of the laws and the doings of a drunken mob. I'm afraid the most of them are a long way from law abiding people yet."

Joe, who did not like the position in which he stood as respecting Lee, here made an offer of aid. "I don't suppose my word is any good now, but if you'll let me do it I'll go out and round up Judge Higley. I think I know where he is."

To this Lize objected. "You can't do that, Ross; you better hold the fort till morning."

Lee was rather sorry, too, for young Gregg, who bore his buffeting with the imperturbable face of the heroes of his class. He had gone into this enterprise with much the same spirit in which he had stolen gates and misplaced signs during his brief college career, and he was now disposed (in the presence of a pretty girl) to carry it out with undiminished impudence. "It only means a fine, anyway," he assured himself.

Cavanagh did not trust Gregg, either, and as this was the first time he had been called upon to arrest men for killing game out of season he could not afford to fail of any precaution. Tired and sleepy as he was he must remain on guard. "But you and your daughter must go to bed at once," he urged.

Lize, under the spur of her dram, talked on with bitter boldness, berating the town and its people. Gregg listened to her with expressionless visage, his eyes dreamily fixed on Lee's face, but his companion, the old herder, seemed to palpitate with shame and fear. And Ross had the feeling at the moment that in this ragged, unkempt old hobo was the skeleton of one of the old time heroes. He was wasted with drink and worn by wind and rain, but he was very far from being commonplace.

CHAPTER XII.

THE LAW STEPS IN.

"HERE they come again!" called Lize as the hurry of feet along the walk threatened another attack. Ross Cavanagh again drew his revolver and stood at guard, and Lize, recovering her own weapon, took a place by his side.

With the strength of a bear the new assailant shook the bolted door. "Let me in!" he roared.

"It's dad!" called young Gregg. "Go away, you chump!"

"Let me in or I'll smash this door!" retorted Gregg.

"You smash that door, old Bullfrog," announced Lize, "and I'll carry one of your lungs away. If you want to get in here you hunt up the judge of this town and the constable."

The old rancher muttered a fierce curse, while Ross explained the situation. "I'm as eager to get rid of these culprits as any one can be, but they must be taken by proper authority. Bring a writ from the magistrate and you may have them and welcome."

Gregg went away without further word, and Lize said: "He'll find Higley if he's in town, and he is in town, for I saw him this afternoon. He's hiding out to save himself trouble."

Lee Virginia, with an understanding of what the ranger had endured, asked: "Can't I get you something to eat? Would you like some coffee?"

"I would indeed," he answered, and his tone pleased her.

She hurried away to get it, while Cavanagh disposed his prisoners behind a couple of tables in the corner. "I guess you're in for a night of it," he remarked grimly, "so make yourselves as comfortable as you can. Perhaps your experience may be a discouragement to others of your kind."

Lee returned soon with a pot of fresh coffee and some sandwiches, the sight of which roused young Gregg to the impudent remark: "Well, notice that! And we're left out!" But Edwards shrank into the shadow, as if the light hurt him.

Ross thanked Lee formally, but there was more than gratitude in his glance, and she turned away to hide her face from other eyes. Strange place it was for the blooming of love's roses, but they were in her cheeks as she faced her mother, and Lize, with fresh acknowledgment of her beauty, broke out again: "Well, this settles it. I'm going to get out of this town, dearie. I'm done. This ends the cattle country for me. I ought to have turned you back the day you landed here."

The feet halted. A sharp rap sounded on the door.

"Who's there?" demanded Lize.

"The law!" replied a wheezy voice. "Open in the name of the law!"

"It's old Higley," announced Lize. "Open the door, Ross."

"Come in, law," she called ironically as the justice appeared. "You look kind of mice eaten, but you're all the law this blame town can sport. Come in and do your duty."

Higley (a tall man with a rusty brown beard, very much on his dignity) entered the room, followed by a short, bullet headed citizen in a rumpled blue suit with a big star on his breast. Behind on the sidewalk Ballard and a dozen of his gang could be seen. Sam Gregg, the moving cause of this resurrection of law and order, followed the constable. Higley opened upon Cavanagh. "Well, sir, what's all this row? What's your charge against these men?"

"Killing mountain sheep. I caught them with the head of a big ram upon their pack."

"Make him show his commission," shouted Gregg. "He's never been commissioned. He's no game warden."

Higley hemmed. "I—ah—oh, his authority is all right, Sam; I've seen it. If he can prove that these men killed the sheep we'll have to act."

Cavanagh briefly related how he had captured the men on the trail. "The head of the ram is at the livery barn with my horse."

"How about that?" asked Higley, turning to Joe.

"I guess that's right," replied the insolent youth. "We killed the sheep all right."

Higley was in a corner. He didn't like to offend Gregg, and yet the case was plain. He met the issue blandly. "Marshal, take these men into custody." Then to Ross: "We'll relieve you of your care, Mr. Cavanagh. You may appear tomorrow at 9."

It was a farcical ending to a very arduous thirty-six hour campaign, and Ross, feeling like a man who, having rolled a huge stone to the top of a hill, has been ordered to drop it, said, "I insist on the maximum penalty of the law, Justice Higley, especially for this man!" He indicated Joe Gregg.

"No more sneaking, Higley," added Lize, uttering her distrust in blunt phrase. "You put these men through or I'll make you trouble."

Higley turned and with unsteady solemnity saluted. "Fear not my government, madam," said he and so made exit.

After the door had closed behind them Cavanagh bitterly complained. "I've delivered my prisoners over into the hands of their friends. I feel like a fool. What assurance have I that they will ever be punished?"

"You have Higley's word," retorted Lize, with ironic inflection. "He'll fine 'em as much as $10 apiece and confiscate the head, which is worth fifty."

"No matter what happens now, you've done your duty," added Lee Virginia with intent to comfort him.

Lize, now that the stress of the battle was over, fell a-tremble. "I reckon I'll have to go to bed," she admitted. "I'm all in. This night service is wearing."

She did indeed resemble the wreck of a woman as she lay out upon her bed, her hands twitching, her eyes closed, and Ross was profoundly alarmed. "You need the doctor," he urged. "Let me bring him."

"No," she said huskily, but with decision; "I'm only tired. I'll be all right soon. Send the people away. Tell 'em to go to bed."

For half an hour Cavanagh remained in the room waiting to see if the doctor's services would be required, but at the end of that time, as she had apparently fallen asleep, he rose and tiptoed out into the hall.

Lee followed, and they faced each other in such intimacy as the shipwrecked feel after the rescue.

When they were quite alone Lee said, "You must not go out into the streets tonight."

"There's no danger. These hoodlums would not dare to attack me."

"Nevertheless you shall not go!" she declared. "Wait a moment," she commanded and re-entered her mother's room.

As he stood there at Lize Wetherford's door and his mind went back over her brave deed, which had gone far to atone for her vulgarity, his respect for her deepened. Lee Virginia opened the door and stepped out close beside him.

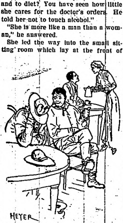
"Her breathing is quieter," she whispered. "I think she's going to sleep. It's been a terrible night! You must be horribly tired. I will find you some place to sleep. Please don't go till after breakfast," she smiled wanly. "I may need you."

He understood. "What did the doctor say?"

"He said mother was in a very low state of vitality and that she must be very careful, which was easy enough to say. But how can I get her to rest and to diet? You have seen how little she cares for the doctor's orders. He told her not to touch alcohol."

"She is more like a man than a woman," he answered.

She led the way into the small sitting room which lay at the front of the house and directly opposite the door of her own room. It was filled with shabby parlor furniture; and in one corner stood a worn couch. "I'm sorry, but I can offer nothing better," she said. "Every bed is taken, but I have plenty of blankets."



"WELL, NOTICE THAT! AND WE'RE LEFT OUT."

There was something delightfully suggestive in being thus waited upon by a young and handsome woman, and the ranger submitted to it with the awkward grace of one unaccustomed to feminine care.

They faced each other in silence, each filled with the same delicious sense of weakness, of danger, reluctant to say good night, longing for the closer touch which dawning love demanded, and yet something in the girl defended her, defeated him.

"You must call me if I can be of any help," he repeated, and his voice was tremulous with feeling.

"I will do so," she answered.

Still they did not part. His voice was very tender as he said: "I don't like to see you exposed to such experiences. It angers me to think that the worst of these loafers, these drunken beasts, can glare at you, can speak to you. They have no right to breathe the same air with one like you."

She did not smile at this. His voice, his eyes, were filled with the gravity of the lover whose passion is not humorous. Against his training, his judgment, he was being drawn into closer and closer union with this daughter of violence, and he added, "You may not see me in the morning."

"You must not go without seeing my mother. You must have your breakfast with us. It hurt us to think you didn't come to us for supper."

Her words meant little, but the look in her eyes, the music in her voice, made him shiver. He stammered: "I—I must return to my duties tomorrow. I should go back tonight."

"You mustn't do that. You can't do that. You are to appear before the judge."

He smiled. "That is true. I'd forgotten that."

Radiant with relief, she extended her hand. "Good night, then. You must sleep."

He took her hand and drew her toward him; then, perceiving both wonder and fear in her eyes, he conquered himself. "Good night," he repeated, dropping her hand, but his voice was husky with its passion.

CHAPTER XIII.

THE OLD SHEEP HERDER.

THE ranger was awakened in the first faint dawn by the passing of the girl's light feet as she went across the hall to her mother's room, and a moment later he heard the low murmur of her voice. Throwing off his blankets and making such scant toilet as he needed, he stepped into the hall and waited for her to return.

Soon she came toward him, a smile of confidence and pleasure on her lips.

"How is she?" he asked.

"Quite comfortable."

"And you?" His voice was very tender.

"I am a little tired," she acknowledged. "I didn't sleep very well."

"You didn't sleep at all," he declared regretfully.

"Oh, yes, I did," she replied brightly.

These two ardent souls confronted each other in absorbed silence with keener perception, with new daring, with new intimacy, till he recalled himself with effort. "You must let me help you if there's anything I can do. Remember, I'm your big brother."

"I remember," she answered smilingly, "and I'm going out to see what my big brother is to have for breakfast."

* * * * * * *

Cavanagh found the street empty, silent and utterly commonplace. He went forth to his duties with a deepened conviction of the essential lawlessness of the state and of America in general, for this spirit of mob law was to be found in some form throughout the land. He was disgusted, but not beaten. His resolution to carry out the terms of his contract with the government remained unshaken.

He carried with him also a final disturbing glimpse of Eliza Wetherford's girl that did indeed threaten his peace of mind. There was an involuntary appeal, a wistful depth, to her glance which awakened in him an indignant pity and also blew into flame something not so creditable—something which smoldered beneath his conscious will. She had not escaped her heritage of passion, and her glances, innocent as they were, roused even in him something lawless.

His pony plodded slowly, and the afternoon was half spent before he came in sight of the long, low log cabin in which was the only home he possessed in all America. For the first time since he built it the station seemed lonely and disheartening. "Would any woman for love of me come to such a hearthstone?" he asked himself. "And if she consented to do so could I be so selfish as to exact such sacrifice? No; the forest ranger in these altitudes must be young and heart free; otherwise his life would be miserably solitary."

He was just dishing out his rude supper when the feet of a horse on the log bridge announced a visitor.

With a feeling of pleasure as well as relief he rose to greet the stranger. "Any visitor is welcome this night," he said.

The horseman proved to be his former prisoner, the old man Edwards, who slipped from his saddle with the never failing grace of the cow man and came slowly toward the cabin. He smiled wearily as he said: "I'm on your trail, Mr. Ranger, but I bear no malice. You were doing your duty. Can you tell me how far it is to Ambro's camp?"

There was something forlorn in the man's attitude, and Cavanagh's heart softened. "Turn your horse into the corral and come to supper," he commanded with western bluntness. "We'll talk about all that later."

Edwards accepted his hospitality without hesitation. "I'm going up to take Ambro's place," he began after a few minutes of silent eating. "Know where his camp is?"

"I do," replied Ross, to whom the stranger now appeared in pathetic guise. "Any man of his age consenting to herd sheep is surely hard hit by the rough hand of the world," he reasoned, and the closer he studied his visitor the plainer he felt his ungoverned past.

"I suppose Gregg paid your fine?" he said.

"Yes."

"In any other town in the state you'd have gone down the line."

He roused himself. "See here, Mr. Ranger, you've no warrant to believe me, but I told you the truth. Young Gregg got me to ride into the range and show him the trail. I didn't intend to get mixed up with a game warden. I've had all the confinement I need."

"Well, it's a closed incident now," interposed Ross. "We won't reopen it. Make yourself at home."

The stranger, hungry as he was, ate with unexpected gentility, and as the hot coffee sent its cheerful glow through his body he asked, with livening interest, a good many questions about the ranger and the forest service. "You fellers have to be all round men. The cowboys think you have a snap, but I guess you earn your money."

"A man that builds trails, lays bridges, burns brush, fights fire, rides the roundup and covers seventy-five miles of trail every week on $80 per month and feeds himself and his horses isn't what I would call enjoying a soft snap."

"What do you do it for?"

"God knows. I've been asking myself that question all day today."

"This playing game warden has some outs too. That was a wild crowd last night. The town is the same old hole it was when I knew it years ago. Fine girl of Lize Wetherford's. Lize has changed terribly. I didn't expect to see her have such a skein of silk as that girl. She sure looks the queen to me." [illegible]

A NAME ON THE SAND.

Alone I walked the ocean strand,
A pearly shell was in my hand;
I stooped and wrote upon the sand,
My name, the year, the day.
As onward from the spot I passed
A lingering look behind I cast;
A wave came rolling high and fast,
And washed my lines away.
And so, methought 'twill shortly be
With every mark on earth for me;
A wave of dark oblivion's sea
Will sweep across the place
Where I have trod the sandy shore
Of time, and been, to be no more,
Of me—myday—the name I bore.
To leave nor track nor trace.
And yet with Him who counts the sands
And holds the water in His hands,
I know a lasting record stands
Inscribed against my name,
Of all this mortal part has wrought
Of all this thinking soul has thought
And from these fleeting mountains caught
For glory or for shame.

Yes they do do strange things in Chicago. Now the election board has dis-franchised and struck from from the list of voters all suspects who failed to appear in answer to written notices to do so, except those named in lodging-house proprietor's affidavits. This in other words disfranchises hundreds of legal voters who, because of its being vacation week at the Chicago University failed to receive their notices, while they accepted the affidavits of lodging-house proprietors. When shall mortal man learn to promote justice?

UNCLE SAM'S COAL PILE.

Uncle Sam is not entirely out of coal. He has some 70,000,000 acres of good coal land left. But he is not disposing of it quite as improvidently as formerly.

Instead of selling it at a flat "minimum rate" of $10 an acre if 15 miles from a railroad, or $20 an acre if with in that limit, your thrifty uncle now classifies it at what he thinks it worth—$400 to $600 an acre, in many cases.

He has thus added some $420,000,000 to the people's assests. It will go into the reclamation fund to build houses on the land.

You may thank the conservation howlers for that and there's a lot more to come in the same line.—St. Paul Daily News.

The shores of human life are strewn with the wreckage of this contemptible practice of gossip. Murder, suicide, insanity degradation, these are the fruits of the wagging tongue.

If we could have statistics covering with absolute truthfulness the whloe history of wrecked lives, we should find that an astounding part of all failures are due to gossip. Gossip before which nothing on earth or in heaven is touched with sacredness or virtue.

Scandal's venomous tongue, wagging at both ends, attacks the rich and the poor, the high and the lowly, the good and the bad alike. Impelled by a rioting imagination of vicious and brutal curiosity it beats the foundation of society into dust.

"She is unfaithful," or "he was irregular in his accounts." How easy it is to say this! How easy it is to wreck a human life!

The man or woman who believes evil of others is evil himself. If he has no faith in mankind, he has no faith in himself. We cannot enter into our lives, we cannot see the struggles, the obstacles, the motives. But our own lives, our own struggles and our own motives make us gentle and teach us not to judge.

The man who doubts, who sneers, who suspects, who points the accusing finger at his fellow man is the man who will bear watching. Ninety-nine out of a hundred times when you guess the good thing about a man you guess the true thing. And tho a man is guilty, "Let him that is without sin cast the first stone." Probably, if we were placed in his position, with his temperament and his tempations we might sink to lower depths than he ever dreamed of.

Plague is not so devastating as gossip; war is not so hideous as slander.

"So many gods, so many creeds.
So many paths that wind and wind,
When just the art of being kind.
Is all this old world needs."

According to R. J. Bell, editor of the 'Roseau Times,' it is state drainage that is on trial and not George Ralph. If that be true dismiss the case. State drainage is as good now or better than it ever has been and should be encouraged instead of being put on trial. If, however, the trial is what it purpots to be to ascertain the merits of the work and integrity of State Engineer George Ralph then make the most of it. If Mr. Ralph is found guilty of inefficiency, neglect or simple crookedness he should be discharged and censured at the least. If on the other hand the trial shows that Mr. Ralph has been efficient, vigilant and straighthe should receive a public exoneration. When the integrity of any man is questioned it is unfair to the public not to have him tried should he be guilty but it is equally unfair to the individual not to give him a trial if he be innocent. We believe in equal rights and equal priveleges and special favors to none.

PROTECTION FOR ALL, OR NONE

Statement by Master of National Grange before Senate Committee on Finance Feb. 21.

More than twenty years ago the National Grange adopted resolutions declaring that it was the position of the Order that so long as protection was to be the National policy, the farmers must receive the same degree of protection on their products that was given on manufactured articles. This is the Grange position to-day, and we are here to protest against the Canadian Reciprocity Bill, on the ground that its effect will be to establish free trade in farm products, while continuing protection to manufacturers. We are here as representatives of the great agricultural industry of the United States to state clearly that the farmers of the country will not submit to legislation that so manifestly discriminates against their interests, and to assure you that without exception the farmers stand for the principle of—"Protection for all, or for none."

I need not occupy your time with arguments to show tha this reciprocity measure means free trade in farm products. Canada is the only country from which we have at present any reason to fear competition, and if we have free importation of Canadian farm products, we will receive no benefit whatever from the tariff. The principle of protection laid down in the Republican party platform of 1908 is that the tariff rates should equal the difference between the cost of production at home and abroad, together with a reasonable profit to American industries. We are willing to submit the whole question as to the wisdom of the reciprocity bill to the standard fixed by this, the latest National Republican declaration on the subject.

Is it, or is it not, a fact, that the cost of growing the great staple crops, such as wheat, barley, oats and hay; of raising cattle, horses and sheep; and of producing butter, eggs, poultry, cheese, apples, etc., is greater in this country than in Canada? We affirm that such is the fact, and would state in support of our contention the further facts that Canadian farm lands are much cheaper than on this side of the boundary line that the wages paid farm labor in Canada are much lower than in this country; that the Canadian farmer buys his manufactured articles cheaper because of lower tariff rates on foreign goods; and that the farm lands of Canada are chiefly virgin soil, requiring no fertilizers, while our lands have been cropped for many years, so that we must use annually immense quanties of fertilizers.

Does any one deny the average price of our farm lands is from two to three times that of Canadian lands? Is it not a fact that hundreds of thousands of farmers in our Northwestern states have sold their farms and emigrated to Canada, because of the great areas of cheap lands to be had in that country? It is notorious that so many farmers have left Iowa, where land is worth from $100.00 to $150.00 per acre for the Canadian Northwest, that the population of that great and fertile state is now less than it was ten years gao?

The statements in regard to the other conditions which show the cost of production to be lower in Canada than in the United States are equally capable of proof, so that there is no escape from the conclusion that if protection is to be afforded to any domestic industry because of the higher cost of production in this country, agriculture, the greatest of all industries, which is the very fountain of this great nation's welfare and prosperity, is clearly entitled to protection equal to the difference between the cost of production at home ad abroad.

The two principle arguments put forward on behalf of this so-called reciprocity proposition, are, first, that it will reduce the cost of food stuffs to the consumer; and, second, that it will not decrease the prices received by our farmers for their products. Both of these statements can not be true, and it is our opinion that neither of them are. The newspapers of the cities have been filled with glowing promises of cheap food, which they claim will be the result of the free admission of Canadian farm products. We believe this to be wholly a delusion, and that the removal of the duties on these products will not reduce in any material degree the prices paid for them by consumers of the cities. Take for example milk. The duty on Canadian milk is now 2 cents per gallon. It has been shown by investigations conducted by the U. S. Department of Agriculture, that on the average, a farmer in this country gets for his milk 50 per cent. of the price paid by the city consumer, the difference being absorbed by the middleman, railway company and retailer. Suppose the duty of 2 cents per gallon on Canadian milk is abolished? Does anyone believe that the people of the cities will get their milk 2 cents per gallon less than the present price?

What is true of milk is true of all other farm products. I am told by State Master Godfrey of the New York State Grange that in his section of the state potatoes are now selling at 30 cents per barrel or less. In New York City potatoes are selling at from 80 cents to $1.00 per bushel at retail. It is absurd to claim that this great difference is in any way due to the tariff.

After having proved to their own satisfaction that reciprocity will reduce the cost of living, the advocates of this proposition, particularly Secretary-of-Agriculture Wilson and Mr James J. Hill, turn around and assert that it will not in any way decrease the profits of our farmers. Unfortunately for these distinguished gentlemen, the facts are against them The mere introduction of this bill has already forced down the price of wheat six or seven cents per bushel, owing to the existence in Canada of immense stocks of wheat, which if this bill is enacted, can be rushed into this country. It is useless to tell us that reciprocity will not reduce the price of wheat, when the mere introduction of this bill has already this effect.

And here let me point out that the price of wheat has fallen 30 cents per bushel since a year ago. Has the price of bread to the consumers of our cities fallen 25 per cent? You know that it has not, and if the result of reciprocity the price of wheat is forced still lower, it will not benefit the consumer, for flour is still taxed 50 cents per barrel.

It is impossible in the brief time alloted me to go into details showing how the farmers will be injured by the provisions of this bill, but I will take as an illustration the manufacture of cheese. In the State of New York this is a most important branch of agriculture, the total production being about 125,000,000 lbs. With the tariff of 6 cents per pound our dairymen are just able to make a living profit, and most of them have only existed because they have been taking more and more each year from the fertility of their soil. The Canadian cheese producer has cheaper land, cheaper labor, cheaper supplies, cheaper machinery, cheaper feed for cows, and a richer soil. The Province of Ontario, just across from New York, exported in 1909, 164,000,00 pounds of cheese. How could our cheese makers compete with those of Ontario, when the latter have so clear an advantage in the cost of production?

But we are told that while it is true that this bill deprives the farmer of the very moderate protection, averaging less than 25 per cent, now given him by our tariff laws, he receives compensation in the form of reductions of duties on manufactured articles. This is not true. The reductions made by this bill will not in the least decrease the cost of the manufacturers the farmer buys, since Canada is not to any extent a manufacturing country. Thus, we have the Hon. Secretary of Agriculture stating that "free barbed wire fencing will be a boon to our farmers". As a matter of fact this provision will not benefit one farmer to the amount of one cent. We exported to Canada last year 100,000,000 pounds of wire, and imported practically none. The removal of this duty is a fraud, pure and simple, intended to fool the farmers.

If this was an honest reciprocity measure, intended to encourage trade with countries which admit our products on favorable terms, it would provide for the free admission of all articles manufactured in Great Britain. That country has for many years allowed all our products to be imported free of duty, and it would seem only appropriate that we should reciprocate by admitting her products to our markets.

It is claimed by the distinguished advocates of reciprocity that the abolition of the duties on Canadian farm products is necessary in order to save the protective system. There could not be a graver mistake. Do these gentlemen really believe that 6,000,000 farmers will sit idly by, after the trifling protection now afforded them has been abolished, and permit the continuance of a system under which all the manufactured articles they buy are taxed from 45 to 60 per cent.? They should know better. We are here to serve notice that the farmers are united on this question, and are determined that if duties on farm products are reduced, the duties on manufactures must follow. This is not a threat. It is a simple statement of fact. It was said long ago by one of the greatest men this country or the world has ever produced—Abraham Lincoln! "This nation can not long continue half slave and half free." We are here to declare that our national policy of tariff can not long continue high protection to manufacturers and free trade for the farmers, and we respectfully urge that every principle of common justice, fair dealing, and equal rights to all classes and citizens, demands that the farming industry be accorded the same protection that is given to all other industries.

The Motive For War Lacking.

Professor J. W. Jenks of Cornell has taken the trouble to advance seven reasons why there will be no war between this country and Japan. Seven is the perfect number, and it ought to prevail, especially as the first reason given is that Japan cannot afford a war. Her war with Russia impoverished the country, raised a huge national debt which is being carried at a heavy interest cost.

The financial idsparity between this country and Japan is even greater than it was between Russia and Japan. The United States has a great deal of money on hand, but the chief advantage we have over Japan is the facility of borrowing at a very low rate of interest, while the Japanese, already paying a high rate, would have it tilted on them the minute they went to war with a country of the resources and population of the United States.

Seven reasons are not necessary. There is one reason that shold keep the peace between the two countries. It is that they have nothing to fight about, and one at least would sacrifice her chief customer by fomenting strife. Japan sells more to the United States than she does to any other one country. What motive could impel her to cut off trade with such a customer, unless she saw a chance to make herself mistress of a bigger trade as a result of the sacrifice entailed by war? There is no such chance. War would be succeded by peace and Japan would simply have to begin over again to build up her trade with America. The Japanese in addition to being good fighters, are shrewed enough to look beyond the battle to the results. They saw results behind the war with Russia. They had either to fight or to submit to an all-powered and unscrupulous empire at their very door. The United States is in no such a relative situation and never will be.—Minneapolis Journal.

"The majority of the house of representatives has voted to censure Rep. Ferdinand L. Klemer of Rice county because he said in debate a few days ago that the committees of that house were packed in behalf of the "interests."

A censure is merely an expression of disapproval.

It impels some ignominy, but that ignominy is proportioned to and contingent upon three essentials. The censure must be made.

1. Honestly.
2. Justly.
3. By one having the authority to censure.

There is no sting in the censure passed by the house upon Rep. Klemer Monday, because it does not come up to these essentials. The house was not honest in passing it, because many of the men who voted for it know that what Klemer said is true, at least, in part. Every member of the state senate knows this, and more than that every member of the "third house," the lobby, knows this.

For the same reasons the censure fails to measure up to the demand that it be just.

And as a matter of fact the legislature of Minnesota was elected, not to censure its members but to legislate for the people of Minnesota. Rep. F. L. Klemer is responsible to the people of Minnesota, whose consitution and laws he has sworn to uphold, and more directly to the people of Rice county—not to eat meat and drink wine with sycophants and grafters, but to speak and vote in the house as his conscience dicates.

If Klemer said what he did without believing it, he had failed to say it, then he would be subject to a censure that would sting".—Daily News.

DONE INTO DIALOUGE

[illegible] News-Tribune—

Any one who doubts the ridiculousness of the present position of the United States in the world's postal service ought to read the following dialogue adapted, with one or two changes in names, from the Syracuse Post-Standard. The characters are a stamp clerk and a citizen who is not familiar with the postal regulations.

Citizen—A book to go to Superior. It weighs a pound. How much postage?

Clerk—Sixteen cents.

Citizen—Whew! So much! I guess I'd better not send this other book. It's another copy of the same one, going to a friend of mine in London. How much would that be? It weighs a pound.

Clerk—Twelve cents.

Citizen—How's that! You're mixed, aren't you? Sixteen cents to Superior and 12 cents to London—is that right?

Clerk—Right you are.

Citizen—I can't quite figure it out as a business proposition why the United States can afford to send to England for 12 cents what it charges 16 cents to carry to Superior. but I'll take your word for it. And here are two more packages. Each weighs five pounds. How much for one of them to Tokio, Japan?

Clerk—Twelve cents a pound, or 60 cents in all.

Citizen—Surely no one would kick on that—2,000 miles across America to San-Francisco and then across the Pacific ocean for 60 cents. Great thing, the United States postal service. Now here's the same thing to St. Paul—a five pound package. How much postage?

Clerk—Can't take it.

Citizen—Can't take it?

Clerk—Can't take it. Limit on packages for transmission by mail is four pounds. You'll have to send it by express.

Citizen—But you just took a five-pound package to go to San Francisco and thence to Japan, and you won't taken one to St. Paul at any price?

Clerk—That's right.

Citizen—Why?

Clerk—Postal regulations.

Citizen—Well—Uncle Sam is a corking business man, isn't he.

Was Good Once.

A certain well known composer now in the full vigor of his established reputation was at one time when he was comparatively unknown engaged in writing the music for a production fathered by two managers who knew exactly what they wanted. In addition to knowing next to nothing of the musical classics. After having burned much midnight oil and worked himself into a state of semicollapse in a vain endeavor to produce a finale which would please them the composer tore up page after page of rejected manuscript and in despair took to the theater an entire section of "Faust" to which he had somehow managed to fit the words assigned to him. He played it over, and one of the managers said quite unfeelingly, "Well, Gus, the others were pretty bad, but this one is the rottenest of them all." "So?" remarked the weary musician dryly. "It was considered good when Gounod wrote it."—Metropolitan Magazine.

One Story Eclipsed.

"Hot in Brazil?" said the young man who had just returned from a trip to South America. "Well, I should say so. Do you know, for days at a time we couldn't take our after dinner siesta on account of the peculiar noises."

"What noises?" asked the blond stenographer innocently.

"Why, the coffee popping on the trees. You see, the sun was so hot the grains just roasted before they were picked."

The old traveler yawned.

"Rather warm down there, hub," he rejoined laconically, "but when I was down there you couldn't sleep at night. Every once in awhile there would sound the most extraordinary crackling noise that ever fell upon the human ear."

"What were the sounds, Mr. Bings?"

Where One's Breath Falls as Snow.

Verkholansk, a small village in the northeast of Siberia, is the coldest place in the world. It is a convict station. No precautions against escape are needed, for Verkholansk is guarded by the wind. Though the average temperature of the three worst winter months is 85 degrees of frost, intense cold like this is easy to bear in calm weather. But a strong breeze at that temperature or within 20 degrees of it will kill every living thing not under shelter. In the icy cold of Verkholansk an iron ax head dropped on the ground smashes like glass. A board of unseasoned wood, on the other hand, freezes as hard as steel. Frozen nicotine blocks the stem of tobacco pipes, while one's breath falls at one's feet in a fine white powder.

Naturally.

A girl feels flattered when told she looks well in anything, but a wife thinks such a compliment only a plot to get her to wear old clothes.

A Drop of Water.

Figures are sometimes impressive simply by being so stupendous that the human mind grasps them with difficulty. An instance in point is afforded by the illustration once offered to his hearers by an eminent scientist, who, in order to bring to their comprehension the idea of ultimate particles of water, stated that if he was to empty a tumbler containing half a pint of water, letting out each second a number equal to 1,000 times the population of the earth, it would require somewhere between 7,000,000 and 47,000,000 years to empty the tumbler. Lord Kelvin has assured us that if a drop of water was magnified to the size of the earth the particles would be between the size of cricket balls and footballs. If that statement is correct the drops of water in all the oceans are not many times so numerous as the particles, or molecules, in a single drop.—St. Louis Republic.

P. A. Johnson left for Thief River Falls Tuesday to consult the doctor about his little boy.

Petrine Wiseth called at Oscar Swenson's, James Collen's and John Lamporter's last week. Wonder where she calls this week?

Froken Alpha and Fru Kjorvestad were business callers at Thief River Falls last week.

It was quite a surprise to see Irving Quist bring a team of nice horses and buggy up in this country.

Brother of S. J. Gangness squatted on a piece of land in the vicinity of Anstad. I wonder who is the next lucky one? He is welcome, but we would like to see some girls come and join in with the bachelors.

Mayor of Anstad made a business call on Knute Rogness on Monday evening. Business continued until 4 a. m.

Mr. and Mrs. Brevik were seen out in the field hauling stones Tuesday.

The everlasting welldriller of the town of Goodridge, Pennington county was seen on the way to Germantown for some blacksmithing repairs.

Mr. Kjorvestad had a runnaway last week and his wagon-box was left in the Augtad sheep pasture where the Rebecca lodge (which has started in Anstad) is to meet every Saturday evening at 6 o'clock. It is a lodge to make everybody happy. All new members are welcome.

The Germantown-Esplee mail carrier had bad luck last week on his way from Germantown to Esplee with a young girl whom he intended to take home and lock down in his trunk or sell. But this time he had to leave her at Anstad on acount of breaking the spring in his buggy so he had to use an oak pole the rest of the way. Has anybody a strong buggy to sell the poor fellow?

MARRIED.

Miss Lottie Cichy of Millerville, Douglas county, Minn., was married Tuesday morning to Jessie Merril of Hungry Island across the line in Beltrami county. The groom is well and favorably known in these parts and the bride is a sister of Mrs. Chas. Johnson of Torgerson. The ceremony was performed by Fr. Adolph at the St. Bernards church in this city. The bride's mother, Mrs. J. D. Murphy, and sister, Miss Agnes Cichy, both of Fargo, were present, as were also Mr. and Mrs. Charlie Johnson of Torgerson.

Witty Ann Pitt.

Bolingbroke called England's great statesman, William Pitt (Lord Chatham), "Sublimity Pitt," and he dubbed his sister Ann "Divinity Pitt." But that must have been long after there were written and received the delightful letters addressed to Pitt's "Dearest Nanny," his "little Nan," his "little Jug."

"Oh, for the restless tongue of dear little Jug!" he exclaims in a letter written by him from Northampton when, a lad of twenty-three, he had but lately joined his regiment.

Ann Pitt's restless tongue was never stilled, for when Chesterfield, calling on her in his later life, complained of decay with the words, "I fear that I am growing an old woman," Ann briskly replied:

"I am glad of it. I was afraid you were growing an old man, which, as you know, is a much worse thing."

Branding Loafers.

The brand of "S" figures in an extraordinary act passed by parliament in 1547. An ablebodied man or woman found loitering and not seeking work for the space of three days could be seized and brought before two justices of the peace, who, upon confession or on the proof of two witnesses, "shall immediately cause the said laborer to be marked with a hot iron on the breast the mark of 'V' and adjudge the said person living so idly to his presentor, to be his slave for two years. The said slave shall be made to work by beating, chaining or otherwise." If convicted of running away during this period the justices could cause him to be branded on the forehead or the cheek with the letter "S" and then adjudged to his master as a slave forever. For running away a second time the penalty was death.—London Standard.

Illustrated His System.

It was a habit of the wise Frenchman Arago to look during his lectures at the young man who appeared the dullest of the students, and when he perceived that this one understood he knew all the others did.

Once in a drawing room he had just explained this habit of his to some friends when a young man entered and saluted him familiarly.

"But to whom have I the honor of speaking?" asked the scientist.

"Why, Professor Arago, you do not know me? I always attend your lectures, and you never take your eyes off me the whole time."

When Baronets Were Sold.

It was in the reign of good King James that baronets first came into existence. Today you could hardly tell a baronet from a banker. But in the year 1611, when James I. needed ready money and created 200 "little barons" to supply him with cash, they swaggered about in their baldrics and sashes and behaved in the courtliest of fashion. Each baronet in order to justify his title had to maintain a small army of thirty soldiers for three years. In this way the crafty king not only increased his revenue, but actually lightened his expenses.

It is not generally known that the title of "baronetess" has twice been bestowed on women. One of these was the mother of a Dutch general. The other was a Nottingham lady named Dame Maria Bolles, who won her way into the good graces of Charles I. and received the title from his hands.—London Tit-Bits.

When He Was Bad.

It has been said that you never know a man till you travel with him, and certainly traveling has a tendency to bring out all the depravity innate in human nature. Out of this test, however, Benjamin Disraeli emerged with flying colors. This is what was said of him by Mrs. Austen, who with her husband traveled with him when he was quite a young man, as related in Mr. Monypenny's biography:

"Your brother" she says (the letter was addressed to Disraeli's sister), "is so easily pleased, so accommodating, so amusing and so actively kind that I shall always reflect upon the domestic part of our journey with the greatest pleasure. Your brother has behaved excellently, except when there is a button, or, rather, buttons, to be put on his shirt; then he is violently bad, and this happens almost daily."

SAVED HIS MOTHER'S LIFE.

"Four doctors had given me up," writes Mrs. Laura Gaines, of Avoca La., "and my children and all my friends were looking for me to die. When my son insisted I use Electric Bitters I did so, and they have done me a world of good. I will always praise them." Electric Bitters is a priceless blessing to women troubled with fainting and dizzy spells backache, weakness, debility, constipation or kidney disorders. Use them and again new health, strength and vigor. They're guaranteed to satisfy or money refunded. Only 50c at all druggists.

A Sympathetic Oriental

By EUNICE IDA BLAKE

Copyright by American Press Association, 1911.

I am the wife of a United States army officer and have lived a good deal of my time on the Pacific slope, where the only servants to be had are Chinese. There is no doubt but the Chinese make very good servants if they wish to be good, but if they prefer to be bad they can excel at that too.

I married in the infantry and went out with my husband to a station where the Chinese were as thick as blackberries. I had the pride natural to a bride of showing how well I could keep house and appreciated the importance of winning the confidence of my servants, or, rather, at that time my servant, for the wife of a second lieutenant—neither she nor her husband having anything but his pay—is not supposed to keep more than one.

My first Chinese servant was Ti Wang. Ti was the smoothest, softest tongued rascal I ever met. He had enough duplicity in him for an eighteenth century European diplomat. To him words were indeed intended to conceal ideas.

"You velly young wife," he said to me. "You want velly good Chinaman for cook. Muchy Chinamen velly bad. Ti feel solly for Melican lady. Ti be good cook."

All this was spoken with a look of commiseration for a young thing like myself that to one familiar with the man from the Flowery Kingdom would have boded no good. I did not doubt that my servant would be a great comfort to me. It was not long before his true inwardness showed itself. He first made an excuse of having a sick brother who couldn't washy-washy to provide for to wheedle me out of a month's wages in advance. Then he surreptitiously removed under his capacious coat and ample sleeves all the staple kitchen provisions I had bought to last several months. Tea, coffee, sugar and spices disappeared like magic. Then, having received an offer of better wages than I was giving him, he took himself off without so much as saying he was going.

My next servant was Charlie Li. Why so many Chinese are called Charlie I don't know, though Li is an appropriate name for them. Charlie was recommended by the major's wife, who had him in her kitchen for awhile when her regular servant was ill. She told me she would rather have Charlie than the other. I had no fault to find with Charlie except that he stayed with me but a day. He didn't stay long enough to ask for any wages, and since experience had taught me not to pay Chinamen in advance he didn't get any.

After this servants were passing through my kitchen, none staying with me more than a week. In vain I refused to engage one unless he would agree to stay a month. Something must be scaring them away. I didn't see how they could see anything in a young woman of nineteen to frighten them, and I was the only person with whom they came in contact. One of them, who was about to depart after three days of service, I asked why he left.

"You get Melican cook. Chinaman not velly good in this house."

"Why not?"

"Donno. Chinaman won't stay here."

"Why do you go so soon after coming?"

"I am velly well."

He did not seem to care whether I believed him or not. Indeed, he knew he was lying, and I knew it too. However, I had had such bad luck with Chinese servants—and there were no others to be had—that I made up my mind to do my own cooking for awhile.

Meanwhile my husband, who had been making inquiries for me as to servants from brother officers' wives, began to be considerably vexed that I could not keep any of them. There was no such loss of servants among those who sent me mine, and it appeared that I must either be too exacting or have a frightful temper or some other blemish that prevented a servant from working for me, whereas the truth was that after the earlier ones left I simply gave up everything to those who came later, granting all requests and opposing them in nothing. I didn't even dare criticise the cooking of a single dish. The first tiff I had with my husband was when he ventured to remark that perhaps I didn't give them quite free rein enough. I resented the imputation with a fervor that sent him off to the officers' club and prevented his ever making any such suggestion in future.

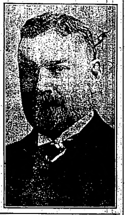
One day I put the tin bread box out in the sun, turning it up on its side and exposing the bottom. I was surprised to see Chinese characters on it. I wondered what they meant. When a woman begins to wonder what is the meaning of anything it is preparatory to making plans to find out. I called the servant of my next door neighbor, who was beating a rug, to come over and translate the characters. He did so as follows:

"This is a very bad woman. She doesn't pay the servants' wages and gives no extras."

That smooth tongued villain Ti Wang, who had pitied my youth and inexperience and had robbed me beside, had chalked a notice on the bread box warning all other servants against me. I waited patiently till my husband came in from his duties and, showing him the characters on the bottom of the box, handed him a translation.

JAMES A. O'GORMAN.

Elected Senator From New York to Succeed Depew.



HOLD RANCHER AS KIDNAPPER

Alleged Leader of Las Vegas Abductors May Be Lynched.

Las Vegas, N. M., April 2.—Tom Breene, a ranchman and cowboy, was arrested here charged with being the ringleader of the kidnappers who carried away Waldo Rogers and forced the payment of $12,000 ransom for his return.

Two other arrests are expected. Intense excitement prevails and violence is feared.

FIRE IN EMPIRE STATE CAPITOL

Damage Amounts to About Five Million Dollars.

Albany, N. Y., March 30.—Five million dollars probably could repair the damage done by fire in the state capitol, but money cannot restore the historical records which were the pride of its state library. After examining the exterior walls with a transit State Architect Ware said that the massive pile of granite was as plump and true as ever.

Although the fire started in the northwest corner of the building it caused the greatest havoc in the southwest corner. Here the red tiled, pointed cupola fell, carrying down part of the carved granite work that supported it and a towering stone chimney. The entire west wall above the second floor was blackened and many of the stone window frames were ruined by the fierce heat. The granite cornice also was ruined. Conservative estimates place the damage to the exterior stone work at $2,000,000.

The interior masonry was damaged to the extent of $1,500,000 and the same sum will represent the loss on the contents of the state library.

No trace has yet been found of Samuel J. Abbott, the aged night watchman in the state library.

The flames licked up the state library, court of claims, the assembly library and document rooms, most of the offices of the excise department and the quarters of the senate finance committee and water and smoke took up the work that the flames laid down and the damage from this cause extends to every part of the building.

NEW LIFE IN HEPBURN LAW

Supreme Court Again Interprets Commodities Clause.

Washington, April 4.—The "commodities clause" of the Hepburn rate law, interpreted two years ago by the supreme court of the United States into what was commonly supposed to be an impotent group of words, was given new life by that same tribunal in a second interpretation. So effective was the reconsideration of the subject that government officials predict that the evils sought to be corrected by the legislation will now be remedied and railroad business henceforth divorced from the coal business. Chief Justice White announced the decision of the court. The entire bench agreed with his statement, although on the previous consideration of the case Justice Harlan dissented from the judgment of the court.

NO INTERVENTION IN MEXICO

President Taft Makes Definite Statement to Senators.

Washington, April 4.—The Taft administration will not intervene in Mexico in behalf of American business interests, nor to crush the Mexican revolution in the interest of President Diaz. This much has been definitely stated by President Taft to senators with whom he has been conferring. Mr. Taft hopes that these flat declarations, coupled with the further unfolding of the administration policy as events necessitate, will quiet criticism.

O'GORMAN LANDS NEW YORK TOGA

Supreme Court Justice Elected United States Senator.

SUCCEEDS CHAUNCEY DEPEW

Protracted Struggle In Empire State Brought to a Close by Selection of Tammany Hall Man.

Albany, N. Y., April 1.—Supreme Court Justice James A. O'Gorman, Democrat, of New York city, was elected United States senator by the legislature after the most protracted struggle over this position ever held in the Empire state. On the final ballot, the sixty-fourth, he received 112 votes to 80 cast for Chauncey M. Depew, whose term expired March 4.

The result was in doubt almost to the minute of recording the votes, owing to the uncertainty as to how many of the Democratic insurgents, who for over two months had prevented an election because of their opposition to William F. Sheehan, would enter the second caucus, which had been adjourned from day to day since Monday.

At the close of a day of almost continuous negotiations the insurgents capitulated and Justice O'Gorman was elected. A few minutes before the ballot was cast Justice O'Gorman's resignation from the bench was filed at the office of the secretary of state as a constitutional provision would have prohibited his election while holding the office of justice of the supreme court.

Dix Expresses Gratification.

Wild applause marked the end of the long contest and the legislature, driven from the state capitol by Wednesday's fire, quickly adopted a resolution adjourning until April 17. Governor Dix expressed gratification at the result.

Charles F. Murphy, leader of Tammany Hall, who for weeks has been striving to bring about the election of Mr. Sheehan, expressed himself as highly pleased at the outcome.

James A. O'Gorman has long been one of the most prominent members of Tammany Hall. He has been one of its foremost orators for thirty years, having established his reputation as a public speaker in its interests when, at the age of twenty-one, his eloquence was credited with having saved a doubtful assembly district.

The new senator from New York will support all the progressive policies of the Democratic party and will join hands with President Taft in urging reciprocity with Canada and the fortification of the Panama canal.

DEATH LIST REACHES 144

New York, April 1.—The death of Sarah Kupla, a sixteen-year-old girl who jumped from the eighth floor of the Asch building during Saturday's fire horror, brought the list of victims up to a total of 144.

The identification of another girl's body by a strange arrangement of buttons on her shoe brought the list of unnamed down to fourteen. There seems little chance of further identification and the charities board has made arrangements to bury them in the cemetery of Evergreens in a plot owned by the city.

Contributions to the relief fund total more than $58,000.

BUCKET SHOPPING UPHELD

Judge Holds It Lawful in District of Columbia.

Washington, March 31.—"Bucket shopping" in the District of Columbia is a lawful occupation, according to a decision handed down by Justice Wright in the District supreme court, and, as a result, the widespread crusade waged by the department of justice to end the practice in nearly a half score of cities threatens to come to naught.

Justice Wright based his decision on the ground that the amendment to the code defining "bucketing" is unconstitutional because it deprives citizens of the liberty to contract guaranteed them by the Constitution.

MANN CHOSEN FLOOR LEADER

Illinois Solon Unanimous Choice of Republican Caucus.

Washington, April 4.—Representative James R. Mann of Illinois was unanimously chosen candidate for speaker and floor leader of the Republicans in the house of representatives at a caucus. He was proposed to the caucus by former Speaker Joseph G Cannon and received the support of the regulars and those progressives who were present.

Chairman Underwood of the Democratic ways and means committee will, as the result of the action by the Republicans, confer with Mr. Mann as to the filling of the Republican places on all of the committees.

DRASTIC ACTION IN MAIL SERVICE

Postmaster General Begins Reorganization Work.

ST. PAUL MAN TRANSFERRED

Norman Perkins Becomes Superintendent of Washington Division, With Headquarters at Seattle.

Washington, April 1.—Drastic action was taken by Postmaster General Hitchcock in effecting a reorganization of the railway mail service. A round dozen of changes of the most important officers in the service were made by Mr. Hitchcock as a result of long and careful investigation and thorough consideration.

Theodore Ingalls of Kentucky, superintendent of the division of rural mails, was appointed general superintendent of the railway mail service at $4,000 a year, in succession to Alexander Grant, who was transferred to St Paul, Minn., as a division superintendent, a demotion to $3,000 a year.

Norman Perkins, division superintendent at St. Paul, becomes superintendent of the Washington division with headquarters at Seattle, succeeding Charles W. Vickery, who is appointed chief clerk of the Cincinnati division, vice A. J. Ball, reduced to railway postal clerk.

Atlanta Official Removed.

Clyde M. Reed, division superintendent at Cleveland, was appointed superintendent of the Cincinnati division, to succeed Charles Rager, who was demoted and appointed chief clerk of the Atlanta division, in place of John F. Blodgett, removed.

John C. Koons, postoffice inspector in the Washington division, was appointed railway mail superintendent in charge of the Cleveland division.

George G. Thomson, formerly superintendent division of supplies, postoffice department, and now inspector in charge at Austin, Tex., was appointed superintendent of the division of rural mails, in succession to Mr. Ingalls.

Charles B. Anderson, inspector in charge at St. Louis, will succeed Mr. Thomson as inspector in charge at Austin, and Inspector George Daniel of the New York division was appointed inspector in charge at St. Louis.

The affairs of the railway mail service were overhauled thoroughly by Mr. Hitchcock personally and the outcome is the most sweeping change ever made in the history of the railway mail service.

HOUSE DEMOCRATS HOLD THEIR CAUCUS

Agree on Program for Extra Session of Congress.

Washington, April 1.—The Democrats at their caucus today agreed upon the following legislative program for the extra session of congress. Committees will not report, unless hereafter directed by caucus, upon any subjects except the following:

Canadian reciprocity agreement, general tariff legislation and legislation affecting the revenue of the government.

Election of United States senators by the people.

Legislation relating to the publicity of the campaign contributions before and after elections.

Reapportionment of the house of representatives.

Resolutions of inquiry and resolutions touching the investigation of executive departments.

Admission of New Mexico and Arizona to statehood.

Any deficiency bills that must be considered.

Legislation relating to the District of Columbia.

After prolonged discussion the caucus adopted an economy program, which, in detail, includes the abolishment of six of the standing committees—militia, private land claims Pacific railroad levees and improvements of the Mississippi river, ventilation and acoustics and manufactures.

The pruning policy will cut out nearly one-third of the house employes and the saving may amount to $180,000.

HALF A DOZEN PERSONS DEAD

Forty Others Injured When Cyclone Wipes Out Town.

Mobile, Ala., April 1.—A death list of six and forty injured sums up the result of a cyclone that wiped the town of Gainesville, Monroe county, from the map.

More than 100 buildings were torn down and trees and crops were uprooted by the furious wind that cut a swath 200 feet wide across the county. The victims were killed in collapsing houses.

Taken at His Word.

"Since you are so busy today," said the urbane journalist, "will you kindly tell me when and where I can meet you for an interview?"

"Go to blazes!" exclaimed the irate politician.

"Thanks. I'll consider it an appointment."—Washington Star.

Worked the Visitor.

"Speaking about visiting Englishmen," said a hotel manager recently who had been reading about one in the newspapers, "reminds me of one that came to the Palmer House in Chicago some years ago when I was room clerk out there. He and another had been paying a visit to the Rockies, and their last stopping place had been Cheyenne. Coming east they had fallen in with some Americans who made themselves agreeable, with this result:

"After they had put their names on the register one of the Englishmen leaned over the desk.

"'I say,' he whispered, 'I am expecting President Cleveland's son to call this evening to return £50 which I lent him on the train. Will you please put the money in the safe for me if I do not happen to be in?'

"I promised, for I had not the heart to shatter his confidence in human nature. President Cleveland didn't happen to have such a thing as a son at that time."—New York Sun.

Royal Perquisites.

The king has many privileges which he never exercises. He enjoys an immemorial right to all gold and silver mines, not only on his own land, but upon any of his subjects' lands within his dominions. So shareholders in Rand and Westralian mines would have to forego their dividends if the king felt avariciously disposed. The king is also entitled to a yearly tribute from his tailor, consisting of a pair of white doves, a pound of cummin seed, a pair of scarlet hose and a silver needle.

All sturgeons and whales caught in British waters are royal perquisites. The whale has a split liability. Its tail belongs to the queen, while its head goes to the king. It is generally assumed that the partition was decided upon in order that the queen should always be supplied with whalebone, but if so the founder of this act of beneficence committed the mistake of giving the queen the wrong half.—London Chronicle.

Curiosities of Etymology.

It is extraordinary how words for the same thing differ in even so small a country as England. Take "left handed," for example. In Gloucestershire such a person is described as "scrammy," in Staffordshire he becomes "craggy," the phrase for a left handed Yorkshireman is "gawkrodger" or "callick handed," and in the next county, Durham, he is "cuddy paw."—London Telegraph.

Experience Teaches.

"I wonder what has happened to Mr. Green?" said Mrs. Brown to a lady friend. "He seems so dismal now, and he used to be a practical joker!"

"Ah," was the response, "he proposed as a joke to his present wife. She accepted him, and he says he will never indulge in a joke again."

A Prank of the Types.

A sentimental novelist, describing his heroine as one who "always kept modestly in the background," was horrified to find it recorded in print that she "always kept modesty in the background."

As Usual.

"So your Shakespeare club is a great success?"

"Yes. We have accumulated enough fines for nonattendance to take us all to a musical comedy."—Washington Herald.

Jean Radski and Anna Zobelski were Russian Polanders. Jean was working hard to get enough money together to be married, for Anna had but a very small dot. One day a man came to the village and put up at the inn. He hailed from Moscow, but he did not explain the reason of his coming. He did not take up any business or profession, and after he had been in the place awhile people began to wonder who he was and what was his errand. All they knew of him was his name, Peter Petroff, and that they learned from him.

One evening Anna and Jean and Peter Petroff met at a dance. Anna was a pretty girl, and Petroff fell in love with her at sight. He asked her to dance with him, and she accepted. He asked her again, and she declined. She did not care to dance twice with any one except her lover. So Petroff asked her if she would not "sit out" the dance with him, as we call it in America. Not wishing to offend him, she consented.

Petroff made the acquaintance of Anna's father and succeeded in ingratiating himself into the old man's good graces. This gave him free access to the house and to Anna. Petroff told Zobelski that he had a comfortable income and was well able to support a wife. He asked for Anna. Her father told him that Anna was already betrothed. Petroff expressed surprise at what he already knew and much regret. Zobelski was vexed that Anna was tied to Jean, because he thought Petroff would be a much better husband for her. He told Anna of the offer and advised her to break with Jean and marry Petroff.

Anna was very much troubled when she heard this. She dared not tell Jean lest it bring about trouble between him and Petroff. Petroff ceased to offer attentions to Anna and treated Jean whenever he met him with great friendliness. This did not disarm Anna's suspicion that there was something wrong about Petroff and that he would gladly get Jean out his way.

Petroff had been at the village about two months without any visible occupation when one morning there was a large number of arrests in the neighborhood of persons charged with plotting against the government. What was the surprise of every one to learn that Jean Radski was among the number.

It was plain to Anna that this man Petroff had come among them as a spy for the government; that he had sent in the names of certain persons as plotters and had included Jean's name for the purpose of getting him out of his way. In a country like Russia, where persons are arrested without due process of law and hurried off to Siberia without trial, this was a very simple method for Petroff to get rid of one whose place he desired to occupy.

This explanation of Jean's arrest was, of course, all inference with Anna and was not remotely suspected by Jean himself. There are certain things that women know by intuition, and when they thus arrive at conclusions they are sure of them.

Anna resolved to play a bold game. She sent for Petroff to come and see her. Petroff came, and Anna said to him:

"My father has told me of your offer for my hand. Of course I could not accept it before Jean's arrest. But his complicity with these plotters against the government absolves me from my pledge to him. Jean has saved 3,000 rubles for our wedding. I wish him to give them to me. If you can find a way for me to see him so that I can get him to tell me where I can find this money I will marry you."

"All I can do," replied Petroff, "is to take you out on the road the prisoners are marching on, which is well known to all."

"Very well; let us go. I will have a sleigh ready in a few minutes."

Petroff drove off a very happy man. He was surprised that after getting Jean out of his way he should have succeeded with Anna without any effort, and he congratulated himself that Anna did not suspect that he was the cause of her lover's arrest. But he had not thought she was so mercenary. He had proceeded several miles when, coming to a rise in the ground, the prisoners were seen some distance ahead slowly walking, loaded with ball and chain and guarded by troops.

Suddenly Petroff felt something hard and cold against his ear and at the same time heard an ominous click. He did not need to look aside to know that it was a revolver. With one hand Anna pressed it against him and with the other held paper and a pencil before him.

"Write an order to release Jean," she said.

"An order! What would an order from me avail?"

"Write! At three I fire! One!"

He dropped the reins.

"Two!"

He wrote what she desired.

"Leave the sleigh."

He did so. She whipped up the horse and, covering the distance between her and the prisoners, presented her order. Jean was released.

Taking him into the sleigh, she drove away by a diagonal road. Neither she nor Jean was ever again heard of in Russia.

They are now in America.

A Soft Answer.

The wife of a man who came home late insisted upon a reason.

"When I go out without you," he said, "I do not enjoy myself half as much, and it takes me twice as long."

CUT RATES ON MEDICINES

Supreme Court Declines to Put End to Practice.

Washington, April 4.—The attempt to put the ban on "cut rates" in proprietary medicines in this country received the unqualified disapproval of the supreme court of the United States. That tribunal declined, in an opinion by Justice Hughes, to give its aid to such an attempt on the ground that it would afford the manufacturers of medicine an unlawful monopoly.

The question of the right of a manufacturer to control the price of his article to the consumer arose in a suit begun by the Dr. Miles Medical company of Elkhart, Ind., against a wholesale dealer in medicines in Cincinnati, John D. Park & Sons company.

The manufacturer sought to enjoin the Cincinnati firm from inducing dealers who had procured medicines from the manufacturer to sell it in violation of a contract with the manufacturer and from selling medicine procured in this way at "cut rates."

ARMED DEPUTIES GUARD MURDERER

Sheriff Fears Attempt at Lynching Will Be Made.

Le Sueur Center, Minn., April 4.—Threats have been freely made to lynch Martin O'Malley. Patrick Keogh, sheriff of Le Sueur county, has armed guards posted about the jail with a supply of guns and ammunition on hand sufficient to withstand a siege. He talked to the governor for some time over the telephone. The convicted murderer, O'Malley, is kept in solitary confinement, handcuffed, and has to be put to sleep with drugs. He has also refused to eat for days at a time and in the opinion of the sheriff is crazy.

The sheriff stated that the wave of feeling against O'Malley is widespread throughout all of the county in which the crime was committed and that open threats have been made upon the streets of Le Sueur Center. He said also that any ablebodied man with a sledge could break through the prison wall in ten minutes. The town is apparently quiet, but the O'Malley case, it is said, is the chief topic of conversation upon the streets and in the lounging places. He said also that the governor had promised him protection from the militia if needed.

DETECTIVE WATCHED JUDGE

Defense Brings Out Point in Cowan Impeachment Case.

Bismarck, N. D., April 4.—That Judge John Cowan was under the observation of a detective employed by a number of Devils Lake men during a period of several weeks the latter part of last year was the statement gained by the defense in the cross-examination of Dan V. Brennan, Brennan having testified to two occasions upon which he declared the impeached jurist was intoxicated.

Brennan is a son of M. H. Brennan of Devils Lake, the candidate against Cowan in the election two years ago, and was one of the signers of the house petition against Cowan. He had an active hand in the fight against the judge before the house and is said to have been responsible for a number of the news stories sent out of Bismarck at that time, designed to stir public opinion against Cowan.

GOVERNMENT LOSING CASE

First Skirmish in Alaska Coal Land Fight Goes to Defendants.

Seattle, Wash., April 4.—The government lost its first battle in the effort to punish the alleged fraudulent locators of Alaska coal lands. Judge Cornelius H. Hanford, in the United States district court, although he overruled the motion to instruct the jury to acquit Charles F. Munday, E. R. Siegley and Archie Shiels, yet he sustained all the vital points contended for by the defendants.

Kind Little Boy.

"Has my boy been a little defender and been kind to dumb animals today?"

"Yes, grandma. I let your canary out of the cage, and when my cat caught it I set Towser on her."

A Change of Opinion.

"I suppose, old fellow, your wife still thinks she married a treasure?" remarked a bachelor to a married friend.

"No," said the benedict; "I have a distinct impression that she regards me as a treasury."

A LOST MANUSCRIPT

By JOHN Y. LARNED

Copyright by American Press Association, 1911.

I became a theatrical manager when I was still very young. I was not at all systematic and was consequently always in trouble. I finally received a lesson that made me change my habits.

One day I left the theater and had entered a cab just about to start away when a girl's face appeared at the window.

"Beg pardon for stopping you," she said. "Are you Mr. Closser, the manager?"

"I am."

"Would you be so kind as to read a play for me?"

I had more plays than I could put on the boards for two years, but the girl had such a winning smile that I consented. I took a roll of manuscript from her; told her to call at my office in a week and I would give her an answer.

In a week she called.

"Have you read my play?" she asked, with that same winning smile I had seen before.

"No; I have been very busy. I'm sorry. Could you give me another week?"

"Certainly. I'm in no great hurry."

"Well, come on this day week."

I went to my rooms and ransacked every corner for that manuscript. It was nowhere to be found. I must have left it in the cab. But I had picked the cab up on the street and couldn't possibly know it from other cabs. I should have admitted the loss and taken the consequences. But I was young and prided myself on my ability to get out of such scrapes. I would first win the girl's good will, then confess and compromise the matter as best I could.

When she called again I put her off by offering her two excellent seats for the evening's performance. She said they would be of no use to her since she had no escort. She smiled at me so sweetly when she said this that I told her I would escort her myself. I not only did so, but said several nice things to her about the opening of her play, a few passages of which I professed to have read. I regretted doing so, however, because she asked me a lot of questions about it which I couldn't answer. I got all mixed up over it and was obliged to tell her that I thought I had got hold of the wrong manuscript. When I left her I told her that three days should not elapse before I had read the play, and I would be sure that it was her play and not some other author's play.

I put the poor girl off for three months. She was very nice to me about it all this time, but the further I proceeded with my deception the further I sank in the mire. The worst part of the matter was that when a week passed without my seeing her I found myself like a toper without his glass of grog.

One day the girl came into my office and told me that she had given the scenario of her play (its skeleton) to a rival manager, and he had assured her that if the dialogue was filled in effectively he would put it on the boards at once. When I tried to put her off some more a beautiful bright tear stood in her eye.

When a man is tilting between indifference and love for a woman he may be easily unbalanced on the side of love by one of those little globules. At any rate, I lost my balance. I confessed to have lost her manuscript, but told her not to mind a little thing like that since I loved her and had quite enough for both of us. If she would marry me it would be all right. I kissed away the tear, and her smile was like the sun peeping from the other side of an April cloud.

From that moment I heard no more of the missing manuscript. After a few months' engagement we were married and after a brief wedding trip settled down to the humdrum of life. One evening when I went home my wife told me that she had received "first night" tickets to a new play that was to be put on the boards and asked me to go with her to see the performance. I tried to beg off, saying that I was needed at my own theater, but she insisted, and I yielded.

Our seats were a proscenium box on a level with the stage. My wife pulled a curtain before her so that she could not be seen except from the stage. The play opened so well that I exclaimed, "By Jove, why didn't I get hold of this?" As the performance proceeded it was evident that a hit was being made. I ground my teeth in vexation at having missed getting on what promised to be a money maker. At the climax in the third act the audience came down in a thunder of applause. Calls were made for the author, but the author did not appear. The manager came before the curtain and announced that he would appear at the end of the play. This satisfied them, and the performance went on.

When the curtain went down on the last act not one of the audience rose to go. The manager came to our box and, offering his hand to my wife, assisted her on to the stage and placed her before the footlights, where she stood bowing till the applause subsided, when she made a very graceful little speech.

"What the dickens is the meaning of all this?" I asked when she returned.

"Oh, this is the play you lost. You left the manuscript in the cab, and, my address being on it, the finder kindly sent it to me the next day."

"Well, I'll be hanged!"

Brides In Iceland.

A quaint old superstition in Iceland is that every bride must invite all her friends to a dinner in her own home and every article of food must be prepared by the bride herself. If she is successful in pleasing her guests she not only receives praise for her own skill, but helps along her younger sisters, who are then assumed to be equally good at cooking and consequently have a much better chance of getting married.

AWAITING WORD FROM MADERO

Mexican Peace Move Making Little Progress.

MAY MEET IN EL PASO

All Efforts Now Seem to Be Centering on Arranging a Conference In Texas City Between Leader of the Insurrectos and Representatives of the Diaz Government—Consent of American Government Necessary.

El Paso, Tex., April 4.—On the surface peace negotiations did not appear to make much progress between the insurrectos and the Mexican federals, but developments came to light that promise much in the next few days.

It is now known that Francisco I. Madero has not been heard from regarding the proposals of the Mexican government and until he is negotiations are impossible. All efforts now are bending toward arranging a meeting in this city between Francisco I. Madero, Jr., and others with representatives of the Mexican government.

To make this possible immunity from arrest must be granted Madero by the United States, as a warrant is out for his arrest on a charge of violating the neutrality laws.

The next step will be to secure safe transportation for Madero to El Paso from the Mexican federal government. It is known that such a proposition has been made. The father and brother of the insurrecto chieftain said they had nothing as yet to add to what they had already said.

United States authorities probably will agree to suspend temporarily the execution of the warrant against Madero in case he comes to El Paso for a conference.

CAPTIVES TO BE PROTECTED

Washington Looking After Interests of Americans.

Chihuahua, Mex., April 4.—Inquiry concerning the condition of the American prisoners at Casas Grandes revealed that the state department at Washington is determined to give the prisoners the utmost protection. Since the publication of the identity of the prisoners it is believed that the Mexican government will see that they are not harmed.

Casas Grandes at present is cut off from railroad communication. Mexican officials will not take the risk of marching prisoners through the insurgent ranks, but it is promised that they will be brought to Chihuahua for trial in the civil courts on charges of sedition as soon as expedient.

SULZER CONFERS WITH TAFT

Called to Hear "Inside Story of Mexican Situation."

Washington, April 4.—In his capacity as chairman of the new house committee on foreign affairs Representative Sulzer (Dem., N. Y. was called to the White House to hear from President Taft the "inside story of the Mexican situation."

"I am obliged to hold the president's statement in confidence," said Sulzer as he left the White House.

Significance was attached to the fact that throughout his efforts to forestall an investigation by congress President Taft has called in representatives and senators connected with the foreign affairs committee and not the military affairs committee.

NO INTERVENTION IN MEXICO

President Taft Makes Definite Statement to Senators.

Washington, April 4.—The Taft administration will not intervene in Mexico in behalf of American business interests, nor to crush the Mexican revolution in the interest of President Diaz. This much has been definitely stated by President Taft to senators with whom he has been conferring. Mr. Taft hopes that these flat declarations, coupled with the further unfolding of the administration policy as events necessitate, will quiet criticism.

REBELS CAPTURE CABORCA

President of Town Makes His Escape and Finds Refuge in Arizona.

Nogales, Sonora, Mex., April 4.—Francisco Mornieau, president of the town of Caborca, Sonora, seventy-five miles southwest of Nogales, arrived here by automobile and reported that about 200 rebels captured that place.

He said he had orders to defend the town with conscripts, but was unable to raise a force.

Mornieau began looking for a safe residence in Nogales, Ariz.

Portland Aids Famine Sufferers.

Portland, Ore., April 4.—Five thousand dollars was cabled to China from this city for the relief of the famine sufferers. This brings the total sent by merchants of this city, including contributions by Chinese residents, to $20,000.

He Didn't.

The wife of a clergyman warned him as he went off to officiate at a funeral one rainy day:

"Now, John, don't stand with your bare head on the damp ground; you'll catch cold."

The Reason.

"Why is that man always grunting so about his business?"

"I don't know, unless it is the force of association. You see he deals in pig iron.—Baltimore American.

Illegible Coin Inscriptions.

Lying on the table in front of a numismatist was an old copper coin. It had experienced hard usage.

"Can you read the date and the inscription?" inquired the collector.

The visitor inspected the specimen; but, although he had the aid of a magnifying glass, he confessed that the words and figures were illegible.

"Let me assist you," the collector remarked. Going to the kitchen range, he thrust an ordinary coal shovel into the fire and permitted it to remain there until red hot. Withdrawing it, he dropped the coin on the utensil, and it speedily became as red hot as the shovel itself. Immediately the date, 1794, shone brightly in glowing figures on the obverse side of the coin, and similar treatment revealed the words "United States of America, One Cent," on the reverse. This test, according to the numismatist, seldom fails with any coin even when the inscriptions have been worn so perfectly smooth that they are invisible to the naked eye.—New York Press.

The Dignity of the Office.

An Indian judge when first appointed to his position was not well acquainted with Hindustani, says the Bombay Gazette. He was trying a case in which a Hindu was charged with stealing a "nilghai." The judge did not like to betray his ignorance of what a nilghai was, so he said. "Produce the stolen property."

The court was held in an upper room, so the usher gasped. "Please, your lordship, it's downstairs."

"Then bring it up instantly!" sternly ordered the judge.

The official departed, and a minute later a loud bumping was heard, mingled with loud and earnest exhortations. Nearer came the noise; the door was pushed open, and the panting official appeared dragging in the blue bull. The judge was dumfounded, but only for an instant.

"Ah! That will do," said he. "It is always best, when possible, for the judge personally to inspect the stolen property. Remove the stolen property, usher."

"Catgut" From Silkworms.

Probably but a small percentage of the fishermen who use flies strung with fine translucent "catgut" are aware that the almost unbreakable substance that holds the hooks against the fiercest struggles of the struck fish comes from silkworms.

The principal center of the manufacture of this kind of catgut is the island of Procida, in the bay of Naples, but most of the silkworms employed are raised near Torre Annunziata, at the foot of Vesuvius. The caterpillars are killed just as they are about to begin the spinning of cocoons, the silk glands are removed and subjected to a process of pickling, which is a secret of the trade, and afterward the threads are carefully drawn out by skilled workers, mostly women. The length of the thread varies from a foot to nearly twenty inches.—Scientific American.

Chopin's Likes and Dislikes.

Bach and, above all, Mozart were Chopin's ideals, "his gods." Hummel, Field and Moscheles were his favorite pianists. Field's nocturnes were greatly prized by him. He admired Schubert, though not without reserve. Weber and Beethoven only partially satisfied him. He disliked much of Mendelssohn's music and found still less to praise in Schumann, never using any of his pieces in giving his lessons. He disapproved of Berlioz, and, while he liked Meyerbeer personally, he heartily disliked his music. Liszt says truly that Chopin sought in the great masterpieces only that which corresponded with his nature. "What resembled it pleased him. What differed from it received scant justice from him."—Dole's "Famous Composers."

The Thirsty Elm.

It has been computed that if the leaves of an elm tree sixty feet high were spread out on the ground edge to edge they would cover five acres of land. These leaves, averaging 7,000,000 to a full grown tree, will absorb water to the amount of seven tons during the normal summer day. Were it not for the ingathering by the stomata during the night a few elms would soon draw off all the water from a district.

He Was Prepared.

Mrs. McTurk—Mr. McDougall, upstairs, fell over his window sill an' was kilt last night, sir. The Minister—Dear, dear, how sad! I trust he was prepared for the end? Mrs. McTurk—Oh, I'm sure he wuz, because when he passed oor window I heard him say "Noo fur the bump!"—Dundee Advertiser.

Three of Them.

The Polite Chesterfield.

A nobleman of questionable veracity told Lord Chesterfield one day that he had drunk six bottles of champagne.

"That is more than I can swallow," remarked his lordship.

A Historic Irish Bull.

Whales In Nets.

Just south of the Bay of Islands, New Zealand, where in a landlocked harbor beautiful Wanganuma nestles in the shadow of Cape Brett, there is established a whaling station, and here is carried on the unique business of catching whales by means of nets set in a narrow channel between rugged rocks. The cetaceans frequent this passage, it is said, to rub off the accumulation of sea growing parasites gained in long journeys through deep water.

INSURRECTOS LOSE IN FIERCE BATTLE

Lack of Ammunition Compels Insurgents to Retire.

El Paso, Tex., April 4.—The bloodiest and most important battle of the Mexican insurrection thus far in the state of Sonora is ended after two days of stubborn fighting which began near the towns of Ures and San Rafael.

Although the insurrectos outnumbered the federal forces their ammunition became exhausted in the continued engagement, while the federals were able to obtain reinforcements and additional ammunition from Hermosillo, and the insurrectos were compelled to abandon the fight. Although the loss on both sides was heavy reports of the killed and wounded have been greatly exaggerated and it is now known that not more than 100 were killed on both sides.

The Word Vaudeville.

The word "vaudeville" sprang from Vaux de Vire, the name of a hamlet in the picturesque town of Vire, in Switzerland. In the fifteenth century this town was the home of Oliver Basselin, the author of witty drinking songs. One of the best known of these songs was a merry dissertation on the author's red nose.

He Was Immune.

The Chin and the Throat.

Remember always to arch the throat, almost as a horse does. If a woman talking to some one turns her shoulders slightly from him and then glances back the line of the throat is always good. For myself I have at all times thought the delicate line from the tip of a woman's ear to the tip of her shoulder one of the most exquisite of the feminine body. Many artists, I believe, would agree with me. So remember what I say, dear ladies—do not spoil or hide that lovely contour with high linen collars or boning. Wear low collars, or if these are not becoming to you at least dress your throats comfortably. Always carry the chin high. If while you are still quite young you can remember to thrust the chin upward and forward—not to an absurd degree, of course—you will not with advancing years have to fear those soft rolls of flesh above the collar that add so much to a woman's apparent age.—Anna Pavlova in Harper's Bazar.

Power of Words.

"For me," writes Lafcadio Hearn in the "Japanese Letters of Lafcadio Hearn," "words have color, form, character. They have faces, ports, manners, gesticulations; they have moods, humors, eccentricities; they have tints, tones, personalities."

A good instance of this power appears in a description of Patti's singing: "There was a great dim pressure, a stifling heat, a whispering of silks, a weight of toilet perfumes. Then came an awful hush—all the silks stopped whispering. And there suddenly sweetened out through that dead, hot air a clear, cool, tense thread gust of melody unlike any sound I ever heard before save—in tropical nights—from the throat of a mocking bird. It was 'Auld Lang Syne' only, but with never a tremolo or artifice, a marvelous, audacious simplicity of utterance."

Testing the "Bud."

An old bachelor had somehow strayed into a young people's party, and, realizing that he could not hope among so many handsome youths to make the heart of a single maiden throb, he said to the nearest girl, whose conversation had shown somewhat more good sense than he had expected:

"Look about the ballroom. Notice that the girls who have removed their gloves have well shaped arms. And—ahem!—some have not removed them"—

"But neither generalization fits me," answered the girl, "for, you see, I have one arm bare and one gloved. What would you say about me?"

"Walk out and let me look at them," said the old bachelor unfeelingly.

The girl took a few steps out, paused and returned.

"Take the other glove off," said the old bachelor.—New York Times.

A Policeman's Advice to Tolstoy.

Count Tolstoy once saw in Moscow a policeman dragging in a most rude manner a drunken moujik to the station. The count stopped the policeman and said to him:

"Canst thou read?"

"Yes," was the reply.

"And hast thou read the gospel?"

"Yes, sir."

"Then thou must know that we must not offend our neighbor."

The policeman looked at the unpretentious figure of his interrogator and asked him in his turn:

"Canst thou read?"

"Yes," replied the count.

"And hast thou read the instructions for policemen?"

"No."

"Well, go and read them first and then come back and talk with me."—From the Anglo-Russian.

The Awakening.

The hallway was dark. He softly came behind her and kissed her lightly on the cheek. She didn't scream. She didn't even look around. And he darted away undiscovered.

A little later he met her in the parlor.

"Then you knew who it was?" he said.

"Knew who it was?" she repeated.

"Knew who it was that kissed you?"

She gave a sudden start.

"Good land, was it you?" she cried.

And there was something in her tone that sent him up to the dressing room, where he glared at himself in the glass and kicked his own shins vigorously.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

An Authority.

Peter McArthur was once talking with a friend when he quoted another man as a financial authority. His friend disputed the right of the person quoted to be considered an expert. Mr. McArthur insisted that the man had a right to speak like an oracle.

"What is your definition of an authority?" asked his friend.

"My idea of an authority," retorted Mr. McArthur, "is a person who bluffs beyond my limit."

Severe Critics.

Put Them Aside.

Dear Miss—I have great confidence in thundering the width of my opinion that I shall thank for kindness if you will give me the privilege of lettering with you concerning love, as your most winning face has drawn my serious attention to you, and that I shall appreciate you in anticipation of an early reply and also terminating this with supreme of high enunciation.

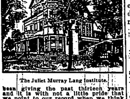
DRINK HABIT CURED "TO STAY CURED".

It is idle to preach of the evils of intemperance for everyone is familiar with them. It also is of little use telling the victim of the liquor or drug habit that the indulgence is injurious to him, that it not only wastes his substances, undermines his health and brings him into disgrace but ultimately entails sorrow and misery upon his family and makes him an object of loathing and contempt as well. The chances are he realizes all this far better than anyone else. The trouble is, his will power is so weakened and the craving is so great that he can't stop. He simply can't. He's got to have help. That help is just what has been giving the past thirteen years and it is with not a little pride that we point to our record when we think of the hundreds of poor unfortunates we have rescued from a fate worse than death—a drunkard's grave—the homes united and made happy and the tears for joy of the mothers, wives and children.



The Juliet Murray Lang Institute.

The cravings for alcoholic stimulants or narcotic drugs can be permanently removed by the Juliet Murray Lang Institute. That fact is well established. It matters not how a person becomes addicted to the habit or of how long duration it may be or how strong the craving or desire has become, the Juliet Murray Lang Institute, soon gives relief. We destroy the appetite for drink, remove the alcohol from the system and then build the system up to its normal condition, leaving the patient mentally and physically the same as he was before the drink habit was formed.

The cost of treatment includes board and medicines and the services of the physician in charge. The terms are most reasonable and will be furnished upon application. If you have a friend or relative afflicted with the drink or drug habit you will be doing a worthy and charitable act in recommending him to the (correspondence strictly private)

DEM. HOUSE ALL HARMONY

But Senate Divided. Insurgents Gaining Strength in Both Parties.

Washington, D. C., April 12, 1911.

When the House Democrats made their initial bow to the country at the opening of Congress they pointed with some feeling of pride to the lopping off of a lot of unnecessary jobs in and about the Capitol and the House Officers Building. All told in good money this cutting off amounted to something like $183,000 a year. About 98 clerks, policemen, elevator men and others, were affected by the cut. The clerks document room, which has always been more or less a standing joke, came in for the slicing and is now a thing of the past. When a member of Congress wanted to order out his cedar box, or wanted some binding done for a friend, he went to the clerk's document room, where the necessary arrangements were made. To perform these arduous duties there were required a superintendent, document clerk and an assistant. Every body said it was a great loafing place, and handy to the house restaurant.

Naturally the Democrats came in with fear and trembling. However, their coming-in was not a noisless affair by any means. It was a great day for the Democrats, and they did not hesitate to let every one know it. Yet the feeling was everywhere that the Democrats were, in a measure, to be tried by the test of their good behavior. On the House side the party in control of legislation for the next two years at least presents a united front. The leaders have agreed as to their program and the rank and file among the membership is in accord with the program. But it is quite different over on the Senate side. The Democrats there are split up by a bitter factional fight. The consdrvatives, headed by Bailey, are trying to get control of thd Senate Democrats. So are the progressive Democrats. It looks as if the Bailey faction would win out, temporarily, at least. The program is to make Senator Martin of Virginia, a conservative Bailey Democrat and who voted consistently with Aldrich, the minority leader.

The Senate progressive Republicans are down in black and white. They haven't been making much noise but in a quiet way they have been accomplishing wonders. They are a recognized force and will be a strong factor this session in shaping legislation. Here are the names of the thick-and-thin progressive Republicans.

Borah, Idaho.
Bourne, Ore.
Brown, Neb.
Bristow, Kan.
Clapp, Minn.
Crawford, S. D.
Dixon, Mont.
Cummins, Iowa.
Gronna, N. D.
LaFollette, Wis.
Poindexter, Wash.
Works, Cal.

Poindexter and Works are the newly elected Senators, the former coming to the upper branch of Congress from the House. These are names well worth remembering. They are all progressives and they are sure to stand together on matters of important legislation.

There were any number of interesting incidents on the day Champ Clark, the newly elected Speaker of the House, took charge of things. Lots of people who couldn't get in the crowded galleries heard the noise and shouting on the inside and read the proceedings in the papers the next day. Representative Sidney Anderson, of Minnesota, who defeated Mr. Tawney in the first district, had a taste of former speaker Cannon on the opening day. On that day Mr. Anderson cast his vote for Representative Henry A. Cooper of Wisconsin for minority leader instead of Representative James R. Mann, the Republican caucus nominee. "When I heard my name called," said Mr. Anderson, "I heard some one near by murmur, 'Who in blazes is that pinhead?' I turned quickly and saw that the speaker was Mr. Cannon. I fancy that Uncle Joe has not a very high opinion of me." The former speaker of the House and Mr. Anderson sit in the same row, only a few feet separating them.

While the new insurgent member from the first Minnesota district is getting on to the ropes and becoming acquainted with the routine and detail of his work, he is giving considerable time and attention to legislation. One problem that Mr. Anderson is directing his attention to has to do with the time of the meeting of Congress and the length of the term. The first district member does not know as yet whether a constitutional amendment is necessary to remedy conditions or not, but he thinks something should be done. Mr. Anderson is strongly of the opinion that members-elect should take their seats at once, instead of waiting, as they ordinarily do, unless a special session intervenes, until the following December. The trouble is, in the opinion of Mr. Anderson, old members not in sympathy with issues on which perhaps they were defeated hold over until the March following the fall elections and they obstruct the very legislation the people want. If a defeated member were not permitted to continue in his legislative seat for several months after his defeat, there would not be the incentive for Congress to create commissions to take care of "lame ducks." This is just one of the arguments Mr. Anderson advances in favor of his theory for a change in the sessions of Congress. He would not have Congress expire by Constitutional limitation on a certain day, but would have it continue until all business had been transacted and legislation disposed of. The short session, in the opinion of Mr. Anderson, offers every excuse for killing legislation on the pretext of too-limited time for discussion and consideration.

Four of the Senate Republican progressives have been named on the committee on committees, which makes committee assignments. Senator Clapp of Minnesota, who has been chairman of the committee on Indian Affairs, will undoubtedly be advanced to the chairmanship of the important committee on Interstate Commerce, one of the most influential committees of the Senate. It has charge of measures relating to railroad legislation.

POWER OF THE SPEAKER

Primary Bill Depended for Life on a Saloon Bill. See Compromise.

The Legislature of 1911.

Were you watching the lower house of the legislature last Wednesday? A most interesting and significant thing happened. First let me offer a few explanations and introduce a few characters.

!!!!*

Previously the Senate has passed a bill extending the primary to the nomination of state officers. The House reactionaries did not intend that this bill should become a law. Accordingly it was sent to the Elections Committee where it was to be held indefinitely. The Elections Committee had a reactionary chairman and a reactionary majority, which was a good and sufficient guarantee to the special interests and professional politicians that this primary bill would not be reported out in time for its passage. In order to understand the situation you must know that business had become so congested in the House as to render the assassination of any measure safe and easy. That is the modern method—the one Congress employed to kill the non-partisan tariff commission. At that time last week—and it is the same today—there were so many bills on general orders, and the calender that there was not the least possibility of any fundamental reform being reached unless it was advanced out of its regular order. A reactionary ruler and reactionary rules were at hand to see that no important progressive measure was given precedence. A reactionary one-third, under the cannonistic conditions which prevailed, could delay and defeat any and all reforms, and this desire for death included a number of measures besides the primary.

Next consider a vastly different sort of measure. Minneapolis has a liquor license zone. It limits the territory in which saloons can legally exist. Two large hotels—the Dykeman and the Radisson—are outside this zone. A bill was introduced to make an exception of these two hotels and permit them to dispose of intoxicants. The people of Minneapolis were and are violently opposed to the granting of this special privilege, which amounts to an extension of their patrol limits. Hence it can readily be seen that this particular bill must have had substantial impetus, personal and otherwise, to make it move under such conditions.

Now meet the characters in the play. Speaker H. H. Dunn, was ill and unable to act his part.

His understudy, the speaker pro tem, was John G. Lennon. Mr. Lennon is a reactionary and an exponent of the modern method—congestion and obstruction. He holds that a majority have not the power to advance a measure at a critical time. This speaker pro tem is opposed to the primary, and progressive ideas generally. On the other hand he was author of the hotel license bill and entrusted with the responsibility of passing it through the House.

I shall next present a group of progressives, naming only two, N. J. Holmberg of Renville and Henry Rines of Mora. Between forty and fifty others might be included in the list of those who have carried on the almost hopeless fight for fundamental reforms. But Messrs. Rines and Holmberg acted the stellar parts on this occasion.

Let us assume that this happened before the session started that morning. Mr. Holmberg sought the speaker pro tem and informed him that the progressives were determined to unlock the death grasp of the elections committee upon the throat of the primary bill and bring that measure before the House where it could be acted upon out in the open. Still assuming, the speaker pro tem sought to discourage this insurgency by informing the exponent of progress that the chair would hold that it took a two-thirds vote to recall a bill from a committee and make it a special order. Of course Mr. Holmberg was sorry and to emphasize his grief probably threatened to connect the incident with Klemer-Stone charges of special interest control of the organization. Whereupon, and this is more than mere assumption, the speaker pro tem's voice became lower and more oily, and he made this proposition to the progressive leader: If you and a few of your followers will vote for my hotel bill, I'll let the primary bill be advanced this way—when we reach "motions and resolutions" in the order of business, I will find an excuse to vacate the chair and will call upon any one you name to preside. While I am out you can make your motion and your man will rule that it takes only a majority vote to make a special order of the bill. Mr. Holmberg accepted in considerably less than a second and Mr. Rines, another dependable progressive was selected to preside during the brief but epochal period during which Mr. Lennon was summoned from the chamber.

The rest of the story is simple and comparatively unimportant. Mr. Lennon vacated the chair, according to contract. Mr. Rines was called upon to preside. Next Mr. Holmberg moved that the primary bill be recalled from the elections committee and made a special order for April 12th. A reactionary raised the point of order that it would require eighty votes to carry the motion. Acting Speaker Rines ruled that a majority could do whatever they pleased with the bill. That settled the question and the reactionaries, after being defeated, clambered aboard the band wagon. All present, excepting Greene, Hoffman, Lydiard, H. Neson, O'Brien and C. E. Stone, voted with the progressives.

Do you comprehend what all this means? The fate of the primary election bill depended absolutely, and alone upon the man in the chair. It should not require many more expensive lessons in politics like the present session to convince people of the paramount importance of the speakership.

Later in the day Mr. Lennon's hotel bill was placed upon the final passage. It is H. F. No. 690. The vote by which it was passed and sent to the Senate was as follows:

AYE—Aker, Andrew Anderson, Boothroyd, Borgen, Bouck, G. W. Brown, L. D. Brown Christie, Clarke, Congdon, Converse, Davies, Davis, Denzer, Diessner, R. C. PERTINENT PERPLEXITIES

The Senate is still sitting on the lid beneath which repose the initiative and referendum and income tax bills.

Dr. W. T. Stone introduced a resolution charging specifically that the special interests controlled the House organization and demanding an investigation. There has been and will be no inquiry of that character.

When the House passed the Kneeland recall bill the attendance was light and for a time it looked as tho, the measure had not secured enough votes to pass. Fearing this result, J. N. Johnson changed his vote from aye to no, in order to move a reconsideration later, which was not found necessary.

MAY SQUAT AT ONCE

So Thinks Hon. Steenerson In Letter Sent "Press" This Week.

The following is a letter received from Hon. Halvor Steenerson this week in regard to the opening of homestead lands on the reservation in Pennington county east of Thief River Falls:

Gentlemen:

I enclose herewith a copy of a letter this day addressed to one of my constituents for your information.

Yours truly,
H. Steenerson.
April 6, 1911.

My dear Sir:

The Law approved February 16, 1911, says "That hereafter all lands x x x shall be subject to homestead entry", etc. The Department circular dated March 3rd, 1911, revokes a previous executive withdrawal as to settlement on the lands, on April 15th, and as to allowance of entry on May 15, 1911, and states that no rights will be gained by settling on the land prior to April 15, 1911. It seems to me that the Act constitutes a statutory revocation of the previous withdrawal, and that after the passage of the act the land was subject to homestead settlement.

There appears to be a conflict between the act and the circular, for the act plainly says that "hereafter" all the lands shall be subject to homestead entry, and "hereafter" means after February 16, the date of the act.

If the circular conflicts with the act, the latter must prevail, and it would therefore seem to be wise for intending settlers to go at once upon the land they intend to enter, make improvements, then, after filing, take an appeal from the rejection, be on the land at midnight April 14th, and continue thereon, after filing on May 15th; and where such a course is pursued it is my opinion that the law would be that such a settler would have a better right than one who subsequently settles and files in compliance with the circular.

Of course, each settler should take his own counsel, and I may be mistaken about what the law will finally be decided to mean.

I am, as a lawyer, simply giving my opinion and it is in no way to be regarded as official.

Very respectfully,

MINNESOTA CONGRESSMEN

Progressives Fared Surprisingly Well on Committee Appointments.

The Minnesota delegation in Congress are given important places on the committees of the House of Representatives. The following assignments have been made:

Hammond—Ways and means.
F. C. Stevens—Ranking Republican on interstate and foreign commerce committee.
F. M. Nye—Judiciary.
C. S. Miller—Indian affairs; expenditures of navy department.
Halvor Steenerson—Postoffices.
C. R. Davis—Ranking Republican on expenditures of state department; insular affairs.
A. J. Volstad—Public lands; education.
C. A. Lindbergh—Ranking Republican on claims committee; coinage and weights and measures.
S. Anderson—Elections No. 2, pensions.

Minnesota loses the place on appropriations held by ex-Representative James A. Tawney and the place on military affairs held by Representative Stevens. Representative Steenerson loses an important committee through the abolishing of the militia committee.

A Serious Accident.

Oscar Swenson, of the Town of Moylan in Marshall county, while doing carpenter work at Beltrami in Polk county last Saturday had a bad fall when his scaffolding gave way and he fell, breaking his left arm above the elbow and three ribs near the back bone. The local doctor bound up his injury and on Monday he was well enough to come on to Thief River Falls. Here he was joined by his daughters, Miss Olga and Mrs. Olson just arrived from Ekman, N. Dak., and on Wednesday in their company, left for his claim east of here. The Press hopes to learn that he is well again in a short time.

New Railroad

The Northern News of Spooner, Minn., last Friday announced that the Soo railway Co., has filed a survey with the Secretary of state of a road to be constructed from their Duluth short line somewhere "North of Bemidji in a north western direction past the west shore of Red Lakes and then running north some 30 miles, thence north easterly towards Spooner as its destination."

We give this for what it may be worth.

Guri Engebretson died Thursday April 6th, 1911 at her home in town of Sanders at the age of 68 years 5 months and 12 days. The cause of death was heart disease with contributory bronchitis, as pronounced by the attending physician, Dr. F. H. Gambell of this city.

The funeral took place on Tuesday the 11th of April at the Landstad church, Rev. M. S. Gjerde officiating; the funeral arrangements being under the direction of Undertaker A. C. Olsen. The pall bearers were Messrs. K. Hanson, N. K. Anderson, H. Finn, S. Thoreson, O. L. Larson and C. A. Carlson.

Deceased was one of the early pioneers in that part of the county, coming here with her husband, Sander Engebretson, about thirty years ago.

PUT OFF TRAIN; GETS $300.
Jury Lands Hard on Extra Charge of 10 Cents for Cash Fare.

The railroad custom of charging 10 cents extra when a passenger offers cash fare on a train cost the Omaha road a $300 verdict in Judge Kelley's court yesterday afternoon.

Last July Richard A. Allen reached the depot at Savage just as the train was pulling out. He wanted to come to St. Paul, but he had only 40 cents. A ticket would have cost him 37 cents. The conductor demanded 47 cents cash fare, and when Allen failed to pay he was put off the train at Mendota. Allen sued for $1,500.

Miss Florence Fasel will entertain a number of her friends tomorrow afternoon at an Easter party the day being the anniversary of her birth. The guests are anticipating a very enjoyable afternoon and treasure the very novel little invitations sent them.

LAND SEEKERS ARE HERE

Reservation Lands Attract Settlers From Southern Minn. and Dakotas.

Many land seekers have come from other parts of Minnesota and the two Dakotas to take a look at the remnants of the diminished Red Lake Indian reservation lying in Pennington county east of Thief River Falls. These remnants were considered too swampy when the balance of it was bought at auction about five years ago. Now, however, as a result of the building of highways and digging of immense ditches, draining this and adjoining lands, these remnants have arisen from their former obscurity and worthlessness and are attracting widespread interest and attention. Dozens of men have this week passed through Thief River Falls, making inquiries and buying maps, with a view to locating these remnants and building homes on them, thus acquiring squatters' rights to them previous to their opening up for homesteading on May 15 next.

Quite a detachment comes from Gary, S. Dak., others from Kenyon and Fisher, Minn; and other points. Among these are the following H. L. Hanson, Gudmond N. Hillesland, I. A. Jesme, and Nels L. Sorby all of Gary, S. Dak; J. L. Foss of Kenyon, Minn; and A. M. Strande of Fisher, Minn.

HED IN CHARGE OF ST. HILAIRE CREAMERY.

A. J. Hed, of Winthrop, Minn., arrived in town Wednesday and assumed the management of the creamery this morning. He has been in charge of the Fertile creamery during the past three years and is understood to be a first class man in his line.—St. Hilaire Spectator.

COMMUNICATION

Gentlemen:—As I had to go to work this week and it kept me busy dodging rain and bad weather and the clouds of white-wash just kept me on the bound,—but I'll be there in the future with both feet, and be sure to keep a good eye on yellow-foot.

Yours all the time,
Chas. Alexander.

COMMUNICATED REPLIES

A month ago we published an article to discourage the farmers and others from trading with the mail order houses. It, so to speak, gave the merchant's views on this matter. To this we have received some replies from farmer subscribers, and we are unwilling to deny to them what we granted the others,—a hearing in the "Press"—so we publish below two of these, in the faith that publicity never hurts where there are honest differences of opinion.

$20,000 Loss in One Year And This Year is Probably Only a Sample of Many Others.

I suppose our brother merchants are sorry on account of this great loss? And we farmers must have gotten sorry in some way, when we have started to handle our brother merchants like this. Can we farmers be blamed for sending for our goods? No! I should say not. Our brother merchants also order their goods where they get the cheapest and best. We farmers have been baffled so far by the countless wild and foolish stories set out in an effort to intimidate us from doing this. But now this sending business has gotten into a rare business by us farmers. And we know mighty well that we profit by it. Now, if we were to make out a bill of what we wanted of Sears & Roebuck or any other company and bring this bill to our local merchants, as was suggested in a late issue of the Press, what do you think our local merchants would say? This has been tried before without any success. Some would say: "You must figure a little freight." Others would say: "We don't keep any wholesale house here!" But in spite of all this, we farmers know mighty well that our local merchants must have a profit. We also know that Sears & Roebuck must have a profit. But there is a great difference between a large and a small one. We farmers ought to do our trading with our local merchants; but, is the question. Some merchants might think we farmers are turning hostile when we put anything like this in the papers; but the article referred to was also put in by some one. Yet, we do hope this wont make any of our merchants sore.

Yours respectfully,
A Farmer.

Editor Press:

In your issue of March 17th, we notice one of your correspondents writes that one family in your county has lost $20,000 by sending that much money to those catalog houses at Chicago; but why did not your correspondent sign his name to his article? But one can easily guess that he is one of your merchants. He says: "Buy your goods at home and that will keep the money here." Now, do not the merchants have to send money away to Chicago or elsewhere to get their goods? Then all it keeps at home is his profits, while if the farmer sends away he gets the profit instead of the merchant here.

I know our merchants are continually telling us we will get cheap goods if we send away for them, and that the home goods are so much better. Now, we think, that, if so many people have sent away as to send those $20,000, that they know what kind of goods they are getting. We have been sending away for goods more or less for 30 years and have always gotten what we sent for and never been sorry we did so—have made a good investment every time we have sent our money. He talks about the home merchants selling as cheap or cheaper—that is all "bosh" except in a very few articles.

Now I will tell him of one little item that was bought in Chicago and in Thief River Falls a few years ago. One day, here I was opening a box of goods which came from Sears Roebuck & Co, Chicago, Ill: I took out a lot of window stops. The man who saw me asked me the price I paid. I said, "Eleven cents per dozen." "Well", he said, "that beats me for I got some at Thief River Falls a few days ago for father and I paid ten cents each for some just like those." So you see, the farmer is not such a big fool as your merchant thinks he is. Now, Mr. Merchant, figure this for yourself and see how many per cent the farmer saved. Then, again, your farmers must be very wealthy if one family can lose $20,000 in a year. There are not such farmers here, and we do not think your merchants have such a hard time as he tries to make out, when one of your merhants made

CITY COUNCIL HAS RUMPUS

Irregularities Charged against Halvorson; Committe of Investigation Named.

Last Firday evening at a meeting of the city council we are informed that charges were preferred by members of the council against G. A. Halvorson of irregularities in the management of the Auditorium and in connection with his office as city attorney. Forder, Jensen and Sedlacek were appointed a committee to investigate these charges and to report to the council the following Tuesday.

At the Tuesday meeting a large crowd of interested citizens had gathered to hear the findings of this investigating committee. But the committee only asked for an extension of time. They assured the council and the public that in a weeks time they would be able to make an altogether satisfactory report. They were granted another week.

Forder, President of the Council said that, seeing there had been charges made against him, he invited investigation of his official acts. He moved that the Vice-President, then temporary chairman, shall appoint 3 citizens and invite the commercial club to appoint 4 and that these 7 citizens should constitute an investigating committee to scrutinize all his official acts since he became a member of the council. This motion was passed, but the committee men have not yet been named. Mr. Forder said he had done "willfully and maliciously" whatever he had done and would take the consequences. Mr. Forder and Sedlacek admitted that they together with the Mayor had caused the city clerk to draw a city warrant of $150 in favor of Mr. Sedlacek, and that this money was divided equally among them when they went to the Cities some three weeks ago to lobby against that Telephone Bill, as reported in the Press at the time. They explained that this warrant was intended only as security to the bank that furnished the money for the trip; but that when they returned the bank had presented this warrant and been paid off.

Mr. Forder also moved an investigation of the roof of the Auditorium, which he said he did not believe was up to specifications. He also made the statement that, "The wrong goes further than the roof; there are other leaks and some one must make good." A committee of three of the council was appointed to examine the roof.

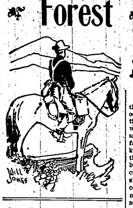
Cavanagh, Forest Ranger

The Great Conservation Novel

By HAMLIN GARLAND

Copyright, 1910, by Hamlin Garland



Cavanagh did not greatly relish this line of conversation, but the pause enabled him to say: "Miss Wetherford is not much western; she got her training in the east. She's been with an aunt ever since her father's death."

"He's dead, is he?"

"So far as anybody knows, he is."

"Well, he's no loss. I knew him too. He was all kinds of a fool. He got on the wrong side of the rustler line-up. Them Wetherford women think a whole lot of you. 'Pears like they'd both fight for you. Are you sweet on the girl?"

"Now, see here, old man," Ross retorted sharply, "you want to do a lot of thinking before you comment on Miss Wetherford. I won't stand for any nasty clack."

Edwards meekly answered: "I wasn't going to say anything out of the way. I was fixing for to praise her."

"All the same, I don't intend to discuss her with you," was Cavanagh's curt answer.

The herder fell back into silence while the ranger prepared his bunk for the night. The fact that he transferred some of the blankets from his own bed to that of his visitor did not escape Edwards' keen eyes, and with grateful intent he said:

"I can give you a tip, Mr. Ranger," said he, breaking out of a silence. "The triangle outfit is holding more cattle on the forest than their permits call for."

"How do you know?"

"I heard one of the boys bragging about it."

"Much obliged," responded Ross. "I'll look into it."

Edwards went on: "Furthermore, they're fixing for another sheep kill over there too. All the sheepmen are armed. That's why I left the country. I don't want to run any more chances of being shot up. I've had enough of trouble. I can't afford to be hobnobbing with judges and juries. I'm just a broken down old cowpuncher herding sheep in order to keep clear of the liquor belt."

This seemed reasonable, and the ranger remarked by way of dropping the subject: "I've nothing to say further than this—obey the rules of the forest and you won't get into any further trouble with me. And as for being shot up by the cowmen, you'll not be disturbed on any national forest. There never has been a single herder shot nor a sheep destroyed on this forest."

"I'm mighty glad to hear that," replied Edwards, with sincere relief. "I've had my share of shooting up and shooting down. All I ask now is quiet and the society of sheep. I take a kind of pleasure in protecting the fool brutes. It's about all I'm good for."

He did indeed look like a man in the final year of life as he spoke. "Better turn in," Cavanagh said in kindlier tone. "I'm an early riser."

The old fellow rose stiffly and, laying aside his boots and trousers, rolled into his bunk and was asleep in three minutes.

Cavanagh himself was very tired and went to bed soon after to sleep dreamlessly till daylight. He sprang from his bed and after a plunge in the stream set about breakfast, while Edwards rose from his bunk groaning and sighing and went forth to wrangle the horses, rubbing his hands and shivering as he met the keen edge of the mountain wind. When he returned breakfast was ready, and again he expressed his gratitude.

"Haven't you any slicker?" asked Cavanagh. "It looks like rain."

"No; I'm run down pretty low," he replied. "The truth is, Mr. Ranger, I blew in all my wages at roulette last week."

Ross brought out a canvas coat, well worn, but serviceable. "Take this along with you. It's likely to storm before we reach the sheep camp. And you don't look very strong. You must take care of yourself."

Edwards was visibly moved by this kindness. "Sure you can spare it?"

"Certain sure; I've another," returned the ranger curtly.

It was hardly more than sunrise as they mounted their ponies and started on their trail, which led sharply upward after they left the canyon. The wind was strong and stinging cold.

Taking pity on Edwards, who was shivering, Cavanagh turned off the trail into a sheltered nook behind some pine trees.

"How do you happen to be reduced to herding sheep?" he asked. "You look like a man who has seen better days."

Edwards, chafing his thin fingers to warm them, made reluctant answer. "It's a long story, Mr. Ranger, and it concerns a whole lot of other people—some of them decent folks—so I'd rather not go into it."

"John Barleycorn was involved, I reckon."

"Sure thing. He's generally always in it."

"You'd better take my gloves. It's likely to snow in half an hour. Go ahead. I'm a younger man than you are."

The other made a decent show of resistance, but finally accepted the offer, saying: "You certainly are white to me. I want to apologize for making that attempt to sneak away that night. I had a powerful good reason for not staying any longer."

Ross smiled a little. "You showed bad judgment—as it turned out."

"I sure did. That girl can shoot. Her gun was steady as a doorknob. She filled the door. Where did she learn to hold a gun like that?"

"Her father taught her, so she said."

"She wouldn't remember me—an old cuss like me—but I've seen her with Wetherford when she was a kidlet. I never thought she'd grow up into such a queen. She's a wonder. Lize looked sick to me. She ought to send her girl away or get out. As you say, the Fork is no kind of a place for such a girl."

He spoke with a good deal of feeling, and the ranger studied him with deepening interest. He had taken on dignity in the heat of his protest, and in his eyes blazed something that was both manly and admirable.

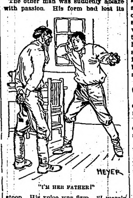
"You're just the kind of a figure to catch a girl's eye. She likes you. I could see that, but you've got a good opinion of yourself. You're an educated man. Do you intend to marry her?"

"See here, Mr. Sheep Herder, you better ride on up to your camp." And Ross turned to mount his horse.

"Wait a minute," called the other man, and his voice surprised the ranger with a note of authority. "I was terribly taken with that girl, and I owe you a whole lot, but I've got to know one thing. I can see you're full of her and jealous as a bear of any other suitor. Now, I want to know whether you intend to marry her or whether you're just playing with her."

Ross was angry now. "What I intend to do is none of your business."

The other man was suddenly ablaze with passion. His form had lost its stoop. His voice was firm. "I merely want to say that if you fool that girl I'll kill you!"



"I'M HER FATHER!"

Ross stared at him, quite convinced that he had gone entirely mad. "That's mighty chivalrous of you, Mr. Sheep Herder," he replied cuttingly, "but I'm at a loss to understand this sudden indignation on your part."

"You needn't be. I'm her father!"

Cavanagh fairly reeled before this retort. His head rang as if he had been struck with a club. He perceived the truth of the man's words instantly. He gasped, "Good God, man, are you Ed Wetherford?"

The answer was quick. "That's who I am!" Then his voice changed. "But I don't want the women to know I'm alive. I didn't intend to let anybody know it. All the same, I mean it. If you or any man tries to abuse her I'll kill him! I've loaded her up with trouble, as you say, but I'm going to do what I can to protect her now that I'm in the county again."

Ross, confused by this new complication in the life of the girl he was beginning to love, stared at his companion in dismay. Was it not enough that Virginia's mother should be a slattern and a termagant? At last he spoke. "Where have you been all these years?"

"In the Texas 'pen.' I served nine years there."

"What for?"

"Shooting a man. It was a case of self defense, but his family had more money and influence than I did, so I went down the road. As soon as I got out I started north just the way a dog will point toward home. I didn't intend to come here, but some way I couldn't [illegible] away. I slid around the outskirts of the Fork, picking up odd jobs of sheep herding just to have time to turn things over. I know what you're thinking about—you're saying to yourself, 'Well, here's a nice father-in-law!' Well, now, I don't know anything about your people, but the Wetherfords are as good as anybody. If I hadn't come out into this cursed country, where even women go shooting wild, I would have been in congress; but, being hot headed, I must mix in. I'm not excusing myself, you understand. I'm not a desirable addition to any man's collection of friends, but I can promise you this—no one but yourself shall ever know who I am. At the same time, you can't deceive my girl without my being named in the funeral that will follow."

"You are only a distant and romantic figure to Lee—a part of the dead past," said Cavanagh. "She remembers you as a bold rider and a wondrously brave and chivalrous father."

"She must never know. You must promise never to tell her."

"I promise that," Cavanagh said, and Edwards went on:

"If I could bring something to her—prove to her I'm still a man—it might do to tell her; but I'm a branded man now and an old man, and there's no hope for me. I worked in one of the machine shops down there, and it took the life out of me. Then, too, I left a bad name here in the Fork. I know that. Those big cattlemen fooled me into taking their side of the war. I staked everything I had on them, and then they railroaded me out of the county. So, you see, I'm double crossed, no matter where I turn."

Every word he uttered made more apparent to Cavanagh that Lee Virginia would derive nothing but pain and disheartenment from a knowledge that her father lived. "She must be spared this added burden of shameful inheritance," he decided.

The other man seemed to understand something of the ranger's indignant pity, for he repeated: "I want you to swear not to let Lee know I'm alive, no matter what comes. She must not be saddled with my record. Let her go on thinking well of me. Give me your word." He held out an insistent palm.

Ross yielded his hand, and in spite of himself his tenderness for the broken man deepened. The sky was darkening in the west, and, with a glance upward, he said, "I reckon we'd better make your camp soon or you'll be chilled to the bone."

They mounted hastily and rode away, each feeling that his relationship to the other had completely changed. Wetherford marveled over the evident culture and refinement of the ranger. "He's none too good for her, no matter who he is," he said.

CHAPTER XIV.

PLAGUE AND MURDER.

UPON leaving timber line Cavanagh and Wetherford entered upon a wide and sterile slope high on the rocky breast of the great peak whose splintered crest lorded the range. Snow fields lay all about, and a few feet higher up the canyons were filled with ice. It was a savage and tempest swept spot in which to pitch a tent, but there among the rocks shivered the minute canvas home of the shepherd, and close beside it, guarded by a lone dog and lying like a thick spread flock of slimy bowlders (almost unnoticeable in their silent immobility) huddled the sheep.

"There's your house," shouted Ross to Wetherford.

The older man, with white face of dismay, looked about him, unable to make reply.

"Hello, there!" shouted Ross, wondering at the absence of human life about the camp. "Hello, the house!"

Receiving no answer to his hail, he turned to Wetherford. "Looks as if Ambro has pulled out and left the collie to tend the flock. He's been kind of seedy for some days."

Dismounting, he approached the tent. The collie, who knew him, seemed to understand his errand, for he leaped upon him as if to kiss his cheek. Ross put him down gently. "You're almost too glad to see me, old fellow. I wonder how long you've been left here alone."

Thereupon he opened the tied flap, but started back with instant perception of something wrong, for there, on his pile of ragged quilts, lay the Basque herder, with flushed face and rolling eyes, crazed with fever and entirely helpless. "You'd better not come in here, Wetherford," Ross warned. "Joe is here, horribly sick, and I'm afraid it's something contagious. It may be smallpox."

Wetherford recoiled a step. "Smallpox! What makes you think that?"

"Well, these Basques have been having it over in their settlement, and, besides, it smells like it." He listened a moment. "I'm afraid Joe's in for it. He's crazy with it. But he's a human being, and we can't let him die here alone. You rustle some wood for the stove, and I'll see what I can do for him."

Wetherford was old and wasted and thin blooded, but he had never been a coward, and in his heart there still burned a small flame of his youthful, reckless, generous daring. Pushing Cavanagh one side, he said with firm decision: "You keep out of there. I'm the one to play nurse. This is my job."

"Nonsense! I am younger and stronger than you."

"Get away!" shouted the older man. "Gregg hired me to do this work, and it don't matter whether I live or die. But you've got something to do in the world. My girl needs you, and she don't need me, so get out of here and stay out. Go bring me that wood and I'll go in and see what's the matter."

Cavanagh looked him in the face an instant. "Very well," said he. "I'll do as you say. There's no use of our both taking chances."

It was beginning to rain, and the tent was dark and desolate, but as the fire in the little stove commenced to snarl and the smoke to pour out of the pipe the small domicile took on cheer. Wetherford knew how to care for the sick and in the shelter of the canvas wall developed unforeseen vigor and decision. It was amazing to Cavanagh to witness his change of manner.

Soon a pan of water was steaming, and some hot stones were at the sufferer's feet, and when Wetherford appeared at the door of the tent his face was almost happy. "Kill a sheep. There isn't a thing but a heel of bacon and a little flour in the place."

Twenty miles of most difficult trail lay between Cavanagh's cabin and this spot. To carry the sick man on his horse would not only be painful to the sufferer, but dangerous to the rescuer, for if the Basque were really ill of smallpox contagion would surely follow. On the other hand, to leave him to die here unaided seemed inhuman, impossible.

"There is only one thing to do," he called to Wetherford, "and that is for me to ride back to the station and bring up some extra bedding and my own tent and so camp down beside you."

"All right, but remember I've established a quarantine. I'll crack your head if you break over the line an inch."

There was no longer any feeling of reaching up or reaching down between the two men—they were equals. Wetherford, altogether admirable, seemed to have regained his manhood as he stood in the door of the tent confronting the ranger. "This Basque ain't much of a find; but, as you say, he's human, and we can't let him lie here and die. I'll stay with him till you can find a doctor or till he dies."

"I take off my hat to you," responded Cavanagh. "You are a man!"

Once back at his cabin after leaving Wetherford, Cavanagh set himself to cooking some food to take back with him to the peak. He brought in his pack horse and burdened him with camp outfit and utensils and extra clothing. He filled his pockets with such medicines as he possessed, and so at last, just as night was falling, he started back over his difficult trail.

Wetherford met him at the door, no longer the poor old tramp, but a priest, one who has devoted himself to Christ's service.

"How is he?" asked the ranger.

"Delirious," replied the herder. "I've had to hold him to his bed. I'm glad you've come. It's lonesome up here. Don't come too near. Set your tent down there by the trees. It can't have you infected. Keep clear of me and this camp."

"I've got some food and some extra clothing for you."

"Put 'em down here, and in the morning drive these sheep away. That noise disturbs the dago, and I don't like it myself; they sound lonesome and helpless. That dog took 'em away for awhile, but brought 'em back again. Poor devil, he don't know what to think of it all."

Ross did as Wetherford commanded him to do and withdrew a little way down the slope and without putting up his tent rolled himself in his blankets and went to sleep.

The ranger's first duty in the morning was to feed the faithful collie and to send him forth with the flock. His next was to build a fire and cook some breakfast for Wetherford, and as he put it down beside the tent door he heard the wild pleading of the Basque, who was struggling with his nurse, doubtless in the belief that he was being kept a prisoner. Only a few words like "go home" and "sheep" were intelligible to either the nurse or the ranger.

Cavanagh waited till a silence came, then called softly, "Here's your breakfast, Wetherford."

"Move away," retorted the man within. "Keep your distance."

Ross walked away a little space, and Wetherford came to the door. "The dago is sure sick. There's no two ways about that. How far is it to the nearest doctor?"

"I could reach one by phone from the Kettle ranch, about twenty miles below here."

"If he don't get better today I reckon we'll have to have a doctor." He looked so white and old that Cavanagh said:

"You need rest. Now, I think I've had the smallpox. I know I've been vaccinated, and if you go to bed"—

"If you're saying all that preliminary to offering to come in here you're wasting your breath. I don't intend to let you come any nearer than you are. There is work for you to do. Besides, there's my girl. You're detailed to look after her."

"Would a doctor come?" asked Ross quite huskily, moved by Wetherford's words. "It's a hard climb. Would they think the dago worth it?"

Wetherford's face darkened with a look of doubt. "It is a hard trip for a city man, but maybe he would come for you—for the government."

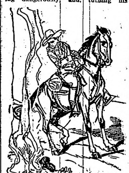
"I doubt it, even if I were to offer my next month's salary as a fee. These hills are very remote to the townsfolk and one dago more or less of no importance, but I'll see what I can do."

Ross was really more concerned for Wetherford himself than for the Basque. "If the fever is something malignant we must have medical aid," he said and went slowly back to his own camp to ponder his puzzling problem.

One thing could certainly be done, and that was to inform Gregg and Murphy of their herder's illness. Surely they would come to the rescue of the collie and his flock. To reach a telephone involved either a ride over into Deer Creek or a return to the Fork. He was tempted to ride all the way to the Fork, for to do so would permit another meeting with Lee. But to do this would require many hours longer, and half a day's delay might prove fatal to the Basque, and, besides, each hour of loneliness and toil rendered Wetherford just so much more open to the deadly attack of the disease.

It was hard to leave an old and broken man in such a drear and wind contested spot, and yet it had to be done; so, fastening his tent securely behind a clump of junipers, Cavanagh mounted his horse and rode away across the boundary of the forest into Deer Creek basin, which had been the bone of much contention for nearly four years. It had once been a part of the forest, but under pressure the president had permitted it to be restored to the public lands open for entry. It was not "agricultural grounds," as certain ranchers claimed, but it was excellent summer pasture, and the sheepmen and cattlemen had leaped at once into warfare to possess it. Sheep were beaten to death with clubs by hundreds, herders were hustled out of the park with ropes about their necks and their outfits destroyed, and all this within a few miles of the forest boundary, where one small sentinel kept effective watch and ward.

Cavanagh had never been over this trail but once, and he was trying to locate the cliff from which a flock of sheep had been hurled by cattlemen some years before when he perceived a thin column of smoke rising from a rocky hillside. With habitual watchfulness as to fire, he raised his glass to his eyes and studied the spot. It was evidently a campfire and smoldering dangerously, and, turning his horse's head, he rode toward it to stamp it out. It was not upon his patrol, but that did not matter. His duty was clear.



HE PERCEIVED A CHARRED HAND!

As he drew near he began to perceive signs of a broken camp. The ground was littered with utensils. It was not an ordinary campfire, and the ranger's heart quickened. "Another sheep herder has been driven out and his tent and provisions burned!" he exclaimed wrathfully.

His horse snorted and shied as he rode nearer, and then a shudder passed through the ranger's heart as he perceived in the edge of the smoldering embers a boot heel and then—a charred hand! In the smoke of that fire was the reek of human flesh.

For a long time the ranger sat on his horse, peering down into those ashes until at last it became evident to his eyes that at least two sheep herders had been sacrificed on the cattleman's altar of hate and greed.

All about on the sod the story was written all too plain. Two men, possibly three, had been murdered, cut to pieces and burned not many hours before. There stood the bloody spade with which the bodies had been dismembered, and there lay an empty can whose oil had been poured upon the mingled camp utensils, tent and wagon of the herders in the attempt to incinerate the hacked and dismembered limbs of the victims. The lawlessness of the range had culminated. The ferocity of the herder had gone beyond the savage. Here in the sweet autumn air the reek of the cattleman's vengeance rose like some hideous vapor, poisonous and obscene.

The ranger sickened as the bloody tale unfolded itself before him. Then a fierce hate of such warfare flamed in his heart. Could this enormity be committed under any other civilized flag? Would any other government intermingle so foolishly, so childishly, its state and federal authority as to permit such diabolism?

In his horror, his sense of revolt, he cursed the state of which he was a citizen. He would have resigned his commission at the moment, so intense was his resentment of the supine, careless, jovial, slattern government under which he was serving.

"By the Lord," he breathed, with solemn intensity, "if this does not shame the people of this state into revolt, if these fiends are not hounded and hung, I will myself harry them. I cannot live and do my duty here unless this crime is avenged by law."

Chilled, shaking and numb, he set spurs to his horse and rode furiously down the trail toward the nearest town, so eager to spread the alarm that he could scarcely breathe a deep breath. On the steep slopes he was forced to walk, and his horse led so badly that his agony of impatience was deepened. He had a vision of the murderers riding fast into far countries. Each hour made their apprehension progressively the more difficult.

"Who were they?" he asked himself again and again. "What kind of man did this thing? Was the leader a man like Ballard? Even so, he was hired. By whom? By ranchers covetous of the range; that was absolutely certain."

It was long after noon before he came to the end of the telephone line in a little store and postoffice at the upper falls of Deer creek. The telephone had a booth fortunately, and he soon had Redfield's ear, but his voice was so strained and unnatural that his chief did not recognize it.

"Is that you, Ross? What's the matter? Your voice sounds hoarse."

Five thousand orange farmers in California do their own packing, shipping and selling. They grade and select their crop into "firsts," "seconds," etc. The firsts are fancy, tree-ripened, hand-picked, seedless, fibreless, thin-skinned oranges—every individual orange a perfect specimen of the finest variety of oranges. They are not only more healthful and more palatable than other oranges, but they are actually cheaper, for they are nearly all meat and nourishment.

OFFICIAL PAPER OF THE CITY.

FRIDAY, APRIL 14 1911.

The newspaper man who conceals the facts because he fears loss of patronage deserves to lose subscribers and with them his advertising.

Conserve the moisture in your soil, Mr. Farmer ; by running over your fields with a harrow to break up the crust formed on the soil. We advice you to do this as soon, for you may need the moisture before you think.

But there is yet another reason. Do it because by stopping rapid evaporation you give your land a chance to "warm up" early. Remember, when you are wet with sweat and chilled by putting on your coat and "warm up". Put a dust blanket on your land and it too will begin to warm up rapidly. This will encourage the early multiplying of soil bacteria, without which you can get no crop at all; for it is they that change the soil into plant food, and the more of these bacteria you have the more plant food will there be for the crop; and, again, the earlier these bacteria can start to develop the more of them will there be before the end of the season. Thus, an early harrowing may prove as good as a dressing of fertilizers,—and how much quicker and easier to apply!

A Minnesota boom for Woodrow Wilson, governor of New Jersey, for the Democratic nomination for president in 1912, has been started by Rep. Albert Pfaender, New Ulm, Democratic floor leader in the Minnesota house.

It happened during the debate in the house Friday over the proposed constitutional amendment limiting the representation of the big counties in the state senate.

The statement had been repeatedly made that New Jersey was controlled by the corporate interests. It was too good an opportunity for Rep. Pfaender to let slip by. Rising as if to a question of personal privilege, he said:

"I desire to challenge the statement and remind the members of the fact that there was recently elected to the highest position in that state, by the uninfluenced suffrage of the people at large, a gentleman of the highest honor, integrity and attainments, who I predict will step into the White House as the next president of these United States, the Hon. Woodrow Wilson."

The statement was greeted with applause.

The Democrats might do a whole lot worse and could hardly be expected to do better in 1912 than to follow out Mr. Pfaender's phropheey.

TWO PRACTICAL TEMPERANCE LAWS.

The Legislature is deserving of great praise for the passage of two highly important temperance measures—the Hanson malt bill and the Dunn road-house bill. Both are practical bills destined to play a leading role in the suppression of liquor evils. The Hanson bill provides that malt and other imitations of beer can be sold only in regularly licensed saloons. This destroys at one blow the favorite refuge of the blind-pigger. Most of these illegal resorts have been able to evade the law and subsist by the sale of beer under cover of selling malt. The two beverages differ only in the percentage of alcohol they contain. They taste alike and look alike. Now that the Legislature has made it illegal to sell malt except where beer itself may be sold, we may expect it to disappear from view. Its function as a means of evading the law has been destroyed.

The Dunn bill is aimed at the road-house, which is usually an evil resort whose very isolation encourages excessive drinking and the harboring of vice. The bill forbids the licensing of saloons except in cities, villages and hamlets. The latter are defined as not more than a half mile square of land on which not less than a hundred persons live. The practical workings of this measure remain to be tested, but there is every reason to believe that it will lead to the closing of numerous evil resorts, especially in the territory around the cities.

Armed with these two laws the Minnetonka Protective Association, for instance, will be able to make a clean sweep of the vicious resorts that contaminate the young about Hennepin County's beautiful lake. For which opportunity the Legislature is to be thanked.—Minneapolis Journal.

The Press would counsel against dragging city polities and investigations into the Commercial Club. If there is any place you want harmony it is there. Who wants to kill our commercial club? Let the club refuse absolutely to have any thing to do with the present investigations.

NOW IS THE TIME TO SWAT THE FLIES.

If a visitor in your house deliberately should wipe his muddy shoes on your best rug, the lace curtain, the tapestry couch and the portieres, you would call the police if you personally were unable to eject him. Consider, then, the unmannerly and offensive conduct of these first house flies of spring, that ae tracking cholera infantum germs over the sleeping baby's face, wiping off typhoid germs on the coffee cake and, loaded with tuberculosis germs, occasionally tumbling into the cream pitcher.

It's up to you to fight the flies—it's useless to call the police for such a need. And now is the time to destroy the advance-guard of the fly army that is responsible for the death of many persons in Duluth each summer. Get them before they have a chance to multiply, and be sure they have no garbage to feed and thrive upon. A welldirected swat right now may mean trillions of flies fewer when the hot weather causes the rapid decay of vegetable and animal matter and makes stagnant the ponds and sewers and sluggish creeks.

The fly battalions do not come with waving banners and sounding drums and glittering weapons, but they are more destructive than all the standing armies in the world.

EMPHATICALLY DENY STORY

Mobilization Not Due to Any Mexican-Japanese Relations.

Washington, April 11.—All available source of information in the White House, state department, Japanese embassy, Mexican embassy, members of the foreign affairs committees of both houses of congress coincide in flatly and emphatically denying that the mobilization of the American army on the Mexican frontier was due to any relations, tentative or otherwise, between Mexico and Japan.

"It is due to President Taft that this yarn about a Mexican-Japanese entanglement, with the absurd and impossible assertion that Mexican secret papers have been abstracted and photographed by Ambassador Wilson, has been denied categorically," said Senator Bacon of Georgia, one of the most conservative, careful and reliable representatives of the Democracy in either house.

His System of Self Defense.

"Have you ever studied the art of self defense?" said a young fellow to a man of magnificent physique and noble bearing.

The elder man looked at his questioner with a quiet smile and then answered thoughtfully:

"Yes, I have studied and practiced it."

"Ah!" said the other eagerly. "Whose system did you adopt?"

"Solomon's," was the reply.

Somewhat abashed, the youth stammered out: "Solomon's! What is the special point of his system of training?"

"Briefly this," replied the other: "'A soft answer turneth away wrath.'"

For the moment the young man felt an inclination to laugh and looked at his friend anxiously to see whether he was serious. But a glance at the accomplished athlete was enough, and soon a very different set of feelings came over the youth as his muscular companion added, with silent emphasis, "Try it."—Christian Endeavor World.

The "Green Flash" at Sunset.

A correspondent writes that during the course of a voyage when midway between Marseilles and the strait of Bonifacio a "green flash" was seen at sunset. The sky was perfectly clear after a cloudless day, with little wind. As the sun approached the horizon the line 'twixt sea and sky for about forty-five degrees each side of the sun became suffused with a rich dull rose pink, and the waves reflected a marvelous ruby shade on their surfaces facing the sunset, while the other faces were an opalescent blue or green from the upper sky. The two colors flashed and changed in a marvelous way. Such intensity of coloring had never been seen by those on board. The sun set clean into the sea; and about ten (or less) seconds after it had disappeared a bright green single flash, just like a railway signal lamp, but brighter far, met our view and rewarded our watching for it.—Symons' Meteorological Magazine.

A Good Creed.

To be able to look every man squarely in the eyes; to make friends and hold them; to keep clean of mind and body; to smile at ill fortune; to laugh at my mistakes; to frown when temptation comes a-visiting; to be ready with a word of cheer when that word will help; to strive to develop to the utmost the heart, head and hand qualities endowed by the Ruler over all; to hold all women in respect and to love one; to weave the thread of eternal optimism into the lives of all with whom I may come in contact; to worship nature and the Great Spirit that conceived it all—in a word, to play the game of life with a steady hand and a qualmless conscience and a real desire to be of service—that is my religion. And, say, if I can live up to the mark, don't you think I've corralled about all the creed that is necessary?—Backbone Monthly.

A Stream of Water.

A high pressure jet of water will bowl over a man as easily as a box of matches and leave him half stunned. It will even turn a bullet from its path. Experiments have shown that a jet of water can be produced at such a high pressure that it becomes practically a bar of iron. Swords have been blunted in attempting to cut through these extra high pressure jets. Some years ago an armed thief attempted to hold up a high official of the Bank of England in his private office. The official managed to get out of the room unharmed and locked the door. A resourceful attendant brought the fire hose. He opened the door sufficiently to insert the nozzle. In a few minutes the would be thief was picked up senseless.—Pearson's Weekly.

The Lion and the Lamb.

He was a gentleman of the old school—never mind his wrinkled brown skin and wrinkled brown clothes—and it was with the most distinguished politeness that he gave his order to the butcher man:

"De madam say please to cut her two lam' chops fum de lion, suh."

The butcher man jerked a loin from a hook, and his customer watched him cut into it. And a waiting woman said to herself:

"Addition forty-eleven to the literature of the lion and the lamb."—Washington Star.

His Denomination.

A man was asked to what religious denomination he belonged.

He thought it over.

"Why," he presently replied, "I believe it is the Episcopal church I stay away from."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

A Misinterpreted Question.

A young Canadian visited Washington one winter to spend the holidays with a pretty cousin and her family. As he was motoring with his pretty cousin one afternoon she said to him: "Do you have reindeer in Canada?" "No, darling," he answered quickly. "At this season it always snows."

When Bishop Phillips Brooks was "commanded," as the phrase goes, to speak before the queen some one asked if he was afraid. "No," he replied smiling; "I have preached before my mother."

Ostriches and Their Eggs.

A singular thing about ostriches is the way they bring up their babies. To begin with, there are a good many eggs in the nest dug out of the hot sand, but the eggs were laid by different mothers. Ostriches do not lay eggs every day, and, being far apart, they would not hatch together. When the nest is prepared, therefore, all the ladies in the neighborhood are invited to contribute an egg apiece, the hostess returning the favor in due time.

Ostrich eggs are delicious. One weighs three pounds, or is equal to a dozen of a hen's. They are very convenient, too, for the hunters in the desert. They not only furnish a delightful meal, but a dish to cook in. The shell is hard and thick, and the egg is set on the fire, a hole is broken in the top, it is stirred with a stick, and when it is done the saucepan serves as a dish as well.—New York Tribune.

A Cartographic Curiosity.

Catherine de' Medici once entertained the ambition of acquiring both North and South America as appendages to her crown, and with that object in view she dispatched a couple of her representatives to the scene of operations. The northern section of the enterprise was committed to the charge of the queen's favorite, Troilus de Mesgonez, who was adorned with the title of viceroy of France and sailed from Havre with a large fleet, only to be wrecked in the Atlantic. Another favorite, Strozzi, was commissioned to capture South America, but he was no more fortunate than Mesgonez, for he was killed at the Azores. These happenings, however, took a long time to reach the ears of Queen Catherine, and in the meantime she nursed her dreams and prepared a map on which "the new world of the north" and "the new world of the south" figured as colonies of France. This cartographic curiosity is among the map treasures of the National library in Paris.

Sweetness That Never Palls.

During a sleepless night the Vizier Mujjeduddin Kumifa dispatched his slave, Bedruddin Elias, to bring him sweets. The slave procured a copper kettle heaped with many kinds of fruits and sweets, and Mujjeduddin began to eat.

"You relish them, my master?" asked the slave.

The vizier shrugged his shoulders. "These fruits are sweet—for the moment," he said, "but show me a fruit the sweetness of which will endure even unto the judgment day."

"Such fruits there are, my master," cried the slave and hastened toward the Mesched Husa, where he awoke the starving orphans in the house of Allwin and led them forth into the room of his master. Overjoyed, the famished children devoured the fruits.

"Look, oh, my master," said the slave. "Here you see fruits the sweetness of which endures unto the judgment day."

Phil May's Habits.

The all-night and next day habits of Phil May, the artist, have furnished material for many a story. Joe Tapley, the singer, said that he came across May one night and heard that the latter had not been to bed for four nights and days. He remonstrated, and May said: "Never mind, Joe; we'll make a bargain. Don't you lose any sleep on my account, and I'll promise that as soon as I feel tired I'll go to bed!"

The House passed one bill providing for the popular election of United States Senators: The Senate passed another bill on the same subject. The Senate passed one recall bill; the House another. This lack of team work is not accidental. Both branches are trying to make a reform record without accomplishing any reforms.

In order to make the reactionaries secure and prevent any recurrence of the Lennon-Rines-Holmberg incident, the organization pushed the Mattson-Hopkins resolution requiring a two-thirds vote to make a special order. This rule would give a reactionary one-third absolute power to delay and defeat reform measures.

Mr. Klemer and Dr. Stone are worth their weight in gold to the state. Since their charges of packed committees directed public attention to the deplorable and disgusting situation in the House, the reactionaries are so thoroughly frightened that they shy at their own shadows. Let any progressive whisper the name of Klemer and the organization will acquiesce in whatever he may demand. The temperance committee killed the Robinson brewery bill. Mr. Robinson quietly threatened to add a chapter to the Klemer incident and they quickly reconsidered and placed his bill on general orders. It was the same with the railroad committees when they were threatened with Klemeritis for killing S. F. No. 440. The vote by which the Haycraft bill was indefinitely postponed was reconsidered.

$20,000 in a little over 3 years and is now enjoying it in California, and so many others can build up new, big stores, and one has sold out and has retired, rich we suppose. Mr. Merchant can publish as many such big scares as he pleases, but he can't stop people from buying where they can get the most for their maney.

Mr. Editor: I should like you to publish this, but suppose you won't. But look at it this way: Who does the most for you, the farmer or those few merchants.

You have published the merchant's side, now give us fair play and publish the farmer's side.

Yours truly,

SCHOOL NOTES

The graduating class of 1911 consists of the following students:

There remain but seven weeks more of school. Parents of children who are failing to do satisfactory work or are below passing mark in one or more subjects are kindly urged to co-operate with the school in securing better results for the last two months. Among 1100 children there are necessarily a number who fail for various reasons. In many cases this may be avoided, so let all concerned boost for two months and reduce the failures to a minimum. It is certain that laggards cannot hope to be promoted.

The short course closed the last week of March. Nearly all the students enrolled in this work left for their homes immediately on the completion of the course.

The janitors of the buildings spent their vacations preparing the school houses for opening last Monday. Everything was neat and clean and ready for the children. It is worthy of note that the marking of books, desks, outhouses, and school property is a thing of the past. Occasionally it breaks out, but it has been practically eliminated. There are many valuable lessons taught in school which are not gleaned from books and for which the teachers receive little credit.

As Good Friday is a legal and religious holiday there will be no session of school.

The seniors presented "Red Acre Farm" at St. Hilaire last Thursday evening and met with excellent success. They speak highly of the citizens. Mrs. Hay chaperoned the party.

A number of beginners appeared last Monday and will receive a brief introduction to the primary, which will fit them for good service next fall.

A number of former high school students who are attending various colleges are home for the Easter vacation. They received a warm welcome from old time school friends. Nearly every educational institution in the state has one or more representatives from Thief River Falls. Fargo College has four and the state university of Minnesota has five. Aside from these young people who are striving for some form of higher education, there are many other students of the local institution who are teaching or engaged in various other occupations.

KRATKA.

School is out in district 67, and the children are now attending the Norwegian school held in the same schoolhouse.

K. K. Austin made another trip to Crookston this week.

The nice weather of Monday induced Albert Hansen to take a trip to town. Pete Paulson the some day was hauling stone.

Chas Henry who sent "Butter cup" his 10 month old Bird dog to the Chicago Dog Show had a letter stating that it had won first prize in "Novice" class also second prize in "Local" class, being beaten in the latter two by his brother and sister.

Some corn raised on the Chas. Henry farm and entered by Stanley Smith of Thief River Falls at the Farmers Institute Exhibit on March 23rd, took first prize. Keep up the good work Mr. Henry.

There are some noticable changes going on around Kratka. While Mrs. DuChamp is away visiting her daughter, May and family at Bird Island, Minn., Harry Keyes is established there as Chief Cook and Bottlewasher trying to outdo Stephen Singer who for the last week or two has again taken upon himself the same duties. But it seems Harry is winning the race as Stephen had to send for his brother, Ed. to help him out. Doesn't some one know of a housekeeper or two to help the poor fellows out?

There are three things with which,
if wise,
And knowing where contentment
lies,
A man keeps on good terms for life-
His stomach, conscience, and his wife.

Paul Parnow is still at home helping his father.

Our neighbors here on the South side, Messrs. Hedeen, Hesby, and Christopherson are having Chas. Henry do their wood sawing.

Pete Lendeboja has completed his ferry, Mr. Lien Helping him with the job.

Don't forget the three big days, Good Friday, Synaters Day, but the best of all Easter Sunday. Christ is Risen.

Ella Henry has gone to visit her sister, Mrs. Lester Blakly of Paynesville, Minn.

Quite a number of our people took in the Class play at the Auditorium, and enjoyed every part of it.

There is joy in every farmers heart
As the much needed rain has come,
For these April showers bring forth
May flowers;
But what brought P. H. Wright's
Goatee and Jim O'Brien's
Moustache?

We are new at this work, it being our second attempt, but it is raining today, which gave us a chance to do a little writing,—perhaps we may come again before the spring work begins. Meanwhile a happy Easter!

If we err in human blindness,
And forget that we are dust,
If we miss the law of kindness,
When we struggle to be just.
Snowy wings of peace will cover,
All the pain, that hides away,
We shall know each other better,
When the mists have rolled away.

GERMANTOWN

We now will be busy with spring work. The fields are in fine condition, and if it was not for the heavy nightfrosts, we would be right in it.

TOM L. JOHNSON.

Death Ends Long Illness of the Former Cleveland Mayor.

TOM JOHNSON'S END IS PEACEFUL

Long Illness of Cleveland Ex-Mayor Results in Death.

Cleveland, April 11.—Tom L. Johnson, twice congressman from the Twenty-first Ohio district, four times mayor of Cleveland, champion of 3-cent street railway fare and prominent advocate of the single tax theories of the late Henry George, died in his apartments in the Whitehall, after a long illness. Death was caused by cirrhosis of the liver. He was fifty-seven years old.

Mr. Johnson passed away so quietly and peacefully that his death almost escaped notice from the watchers. In addition to Mrs. Johnson, Loftin Johnson and Mrs. Elizabeth Mariani and James Tyler, the dead man's faithful valet, those in the apartments when death came were several intimate friends.

The career of Tom Loftin Johnson has been spectacular from the time he reached his majority. A financier of great talent he quickly emerged from a clerkship in the street railway office at Louisville, Ky., into a circle of capitalists who controlled similar transportation lines in Indianapolis, Cleveland, Detroit, Brooklyn and other cities.

In this line he won fame and fortune. Then he entered politics and became mayor of Cleveland, where he had taken up his residence, and became prominent in the iron and steel industry as well as in the ownership and management of street railway lines.

He made a remarkable record as a politician. In politics as in business he was an organizer.

Mr. Johnson was a Democrat in politics all his life and was generally allied with the radicals. He was a friend and supporter of W. J. Bryan.

VICTORY FOR LABOR UNION

Circuit Court of Appeals Orders New Trial in Hatters' Case.

New York, April 11.—The long standing controversy between the Danbury (Conn.) hatters and the union known as the United Hatters of North America was brought up again by a reversal of the judgment for $232,240.12, which D. C. Loewe & Co. of Danbury obtained as damages for the union's alleged boycott of the hat manufacturers' interstate business.

The United States circuit court of appeals on a writ of error reversed the judgment of the circuit court in Connecticut and set it aside, ordering a new trial. The verdict upon which judgment was entered originally was practically directed by the court, which left to the jurors merely the matter of damages, as the "only question with which they could properly concern themselves."

Judge Lacombe wrote the opinion handed down, in which Judges Coxe and Noyes concurred, finding that the lower court erred in directing the verdict.

INVESTIGATORS ARE NAMED

Wisconsin Solon Names Members He Would Have Look Into the Case the Second Time.

Washington, April 7.—Senator La Follette announced a resolution providing for another investigation of the Senator Lorimer case. It names as the committee of investigation Senators Works of California, Townsend of Michigan, McLean of Connecticut, Kern of Indiana and Pomerene of Ohio. No action was taken, as Senator La Follette intends to speak upon the resolution another day. The resolution recites:

"It appears from the published proceedings of the said Illinois state senate committee, that witnesses who were not called and sworn by the committee of this senate appointed to investigate said charges, have appeared before the said committee of the Illinois state senate and upon being interrogated have given important material testimony tending to prove that $100,000 was corruptly expended to secure the election of William Lorimer to the United States senate."

Authorized to Call Witnesses.

After naming the special committee, which it is proposed to have appointed to conduct a new inquiry, the resolution provides for meetings of the committee during sessions of the senate, and gives to it full authority to subpoena persons and send for papers and to administer oaths.

It is expected that the adoption of the resolution will be opposed by senators who voted for Lorimer last session, and that an effort will be made to have the resolution referred to the committee on privileges and elections, of which Senator Dillingham of Vermont will be the new chairman. EXISTENCE OF SLUSH FU[illegible]

Chicago Publisher Testifies in Lorimer Investigation.

Springfield, Ill., April 6.—H. H. Kohlsaat, the Chicago publisher, testified before the legislative investigation that Clarence S. Funk, general manager of the International Harvester company, had told him of the existence of a $100,000 "slush" fund for the election of Senator Lorimer.

Mr. Funk corroborated Mr. Kohlsaat and testified he was told of it by Edward C. Hines, the lumberman, who told him that he had been instrumental in raising the fund and was looking for reimbursement from those interested in having the "right kind of a man in the senate."

MARTIN MINORITY LEADER

Virginian Chosen at Democratic Senatorial Caucus.

Washington, April 8.—Senator Martin of Virginia at the Democratic senate caucus was selected as permanent caucus chairman and minority leader during the present congress. He received 21 out of the 37 votes cast, 16 going to Senator Benjamin F. Shively of Indiana, who was then elected vice chairman. Senator W. E. Chilton of West Virginia was elected secretary of the caucus, the two last named places having been filled by acclamation. Senator Owen declined a re-election as secretary.

TOM L. JOHNSON IS SINKING

Cleveland, April 9.—Former Mayor Tom L. Johnson, who, following a relapse, has been confined to his bed for nearly three weeks from cirrhosis of the liver, passed a comparatively restful night, but is believed to be approaching death.

No official announcement has been made, but close friends of the family admit that dissolution is only a few days distant.

Prominent Publisher Ends Life.

Philadelphia, April 7.—Craige Lippincott, head of the publishing firm of J. B. Lippincott & Co., shot and killed himself in his bedroom at his palatial home at 218 Rittenhouse Square. The body was found by Mr. Lippincott's valet as he entered the bedroom to shave his employer.

Chicago Lawyer Ends Life.

Chicago, April 9.—Ten minutes after consulting his family physician about a supposedly deadly heart malady, Arthur B. Pease, prominent lawyer and member of half a dozen clubs, was dead from poison self-administered.

$8.50 HEDGETHORN PUNCTURE-PROOF SELF-HEALING TIRES A SAMPLE PAIR TO INTRODUCE, ONLY $4.80

The regular retail price of these tires is $8.50 per pair, but to introduce we will sell you a sample pair for $4.80 (cash with order $4.55).

NO MORE TROUBLE FROM PUNCTURES

NAILS, Tacks or Glass will not let the air out. Sixty thousand pairs sold last year. Over two hundred thousand pairs now in use.

DESCRIPTION: Made in all sizes. It is lively and easy riding, very durable and lined inside with a special quality of rubber, which never becomes porous and which closes up small punctures without allowing the air to escape. We have hundreds of letters from satisfied customers stating that their tires have only been pumped up once or twice in a whole season. They weigh no more than an ordinary tire, the puncture resisting qualities being given by several layers of thin, specially prepared fabric on the tread. The regular price of these tires is $8.50 per pair, but for advertising purposes we are making a special factory price to the rider of only $4.80 per pair. All orders shipped same day letter is received. We ship C. O. D. on approval. You do not pay a cent until you have examined and found them strictly as represented.

Notice the thick rubber tread "A" and puncture strips "B" and "D," also rim strip "H" to prevent rim cutting. This tire will outlast any other make—SOFT, ELASTIC and EASY RIDING.

We will allow a cash discount of 5 per cent (thereby making the price $4.55 per pair) if you send FULL CASH WITH ORDER and enclose this advertisement. You run no risk in sending us an order as the tires may be returned at OUR expense if for any reason they are not satisfactory on examination. We are perfectly reliable and money sent to us is as safe as in a bank. If you order a pair of these tires, you will find that they will ride easier, run faster, wear better, last longer and look finer than any tire you have ever used or seen at any price. We know that you will be so well pleased that when you want a bicycle you will give us your order. We want you to send us a trial order at once, hence this remarkable tire offer.

IF YOU NEED TIRES don't buy any kind at any price until you send for a pair of Hedgethorn Puncture-Proof tires on approval and trial at the special introductory price quoted above; or write for our big Tire and Sundry Catalogue which describes and quotes all makes and kinds of tires at about half the usual prices.

DO NOT WAIT but write us a postal today. DO NOT THINK OF BUYING a bicycle or a pair of tires from anyone until you know the new and wonderful offers we are making. It only costs a postal to learn everything. Write it NOW.

TOKIO'S TENDERLOIN DESTROYED BY FIRE

Six Thousand Female Inmates Rendered Homeless.

Tokio, April 11.—The notorious Yoshiwari, inhabited by the licensed hetairae, has been destroyed by fire. Many of these houses were almost palatial in appearance and a thousand of them were burned in a little more than three hours. Six thousand female inmates were made homeless.

The Yoshiwari is conducted under government licenses, which provide for establishment of hospitals and several of these institutions also were burned. The fire was fanned by a strong southern wind and the flames were swept to the surrounding structures to the north. GENERAL BOOTH.

MANY CONGRATULATE BOOTH

Founder and Head of Salvation Army Eighty-two Years Old.

London, April 11.—The king and queen were included among the many persons from whom felicitous messages were received by General Booth, founder and head of the Salvation Army, on the occasion of his eighty-second birthday anniversary.

Within the last year the health of General Booth has been failing rapidly and his condition is now such as to cause his family and friends much anxiety. His eyesight is almost totally gone. Nevertheless, despite his age and physical weakness, he continues to take an active and ardent interest in the affairs of the great organization that he founded nearly a half century ago. Even now, it is said, he contemplates making another worldwide trip of inspection before he resigns the active leadership of the Salvation Army into other hands.

MEASURES TAKEN TO RESTORE CALM

Spanish Officials Make Light of Rebellious Incident.

Madrid, April 11.—The government does not consider the rebellious incident at Canillas de Aceituno as a serious affair. However, suitable measures have been taken to restore the usual calm.

The republicans are somewhat excited over the movement in Malaga province. The easy overturn of the Portuguese monarchy appears to have inspired the republicans, who during the past two weeks have been using the Ferrer debate in the chamber of deputies as a means of agitating against the monarchial regime.

Had the insurrectionary outbreak occurred near the Portuguese frontier it would have given more concern to the government, which is determined not to tolerate the intervention of the Portuguese republicans in Spanish affairs.

HAS NO EFFECT ON TREATY

Customs Court Ruling on Favored Nation Clause.

Washington, April 11.—The customs court in a decision held, in effect, that the so called "favored nation" clause in the existing commercial treaties with England, France and Germany does not restrict the United States in effecting the proposed reciprocity agreement with Canada.

The court's decision was brought out by a comparatively unimportant contest over the rate of duty which should be imposed on whisky imported from England and France. The point involved is the same raised in opposition to the proposed Canadian reciprocity agreement by those who claimed it was practically forbidden by the "favored nation" clause.

CHIEF CLERK EXONERATED

Report of Inquiry Into Alleged Tampering in Cowan Case Made.

Bismarck, N. D., April 11.—Chief Clerk E. H. Griffin, against whom W. S. Crowley of Devils Lake had lodged a complaint charging the attempting to influence evidence given in the Cowan impeachment trial, was completely exonerated of any blame in connection therewith. The report of the committee on investigation showed that the charge was without foundation in fact.

Teacher Commits Suicide.

Madison, Wis., April 11.—Norman Curtis, aged thirty-five, an instructor in railway engineering at the University of Wisconsin, committed suicide on the university grounds a quarter of a mile from the engineering building by shooting himself through the head. Curtis had not been in good health for the past year and relatives attribute his suicide to melancholia caused by ill health.

SUBMIT TARIFF PLAN TO CAUCUS

Ways and Means Majority Agrees on Programme.

RECIPROCITY COMES FIRST

Democrats Unanimous in Recommending to Party Meeting That Canadian Trade Agreement Be Submitted to House and Passed in Advance of Any Other Tariff Legislation—Will Lower Duties on Farm Supplies.

Washington, April 11.—The Democrats of the house ways and means committee have agreed on a tariff programme for the special session and it [illegible]mitted for ratification to a [illegible] Democrats this even[illegible]

Democrats will lose no time in [illegible] several tariff reform measures whi[illegible]
they assert will comply with promises made by them in the last campaign.

The day after the Canadian reciprocity bill is reported to the house it is planned by the majority of the ways and means committee to offer a bill lowering duties on agricultural implements and supplies that the farmer is compelled to buy. There will be something like a hundred articles in this proposed bill for the benefit of the farmer. They will be taken from a number of schedules and will include boots, shoes, reapers, plows, harvesters, bagging and the various articles that the farmer has to buy in the course of a twelve-month.

It was originally planned first to attempt a revision of the woolen schedule, but it was thought best by the Democratic leaders to offer, as a companion legislation to the Canadian reciprocity bill, a measure that in a way compensates the farmer for the concessions that he is supposed to make in the way of duties in the reciprocal agreement.

Revision of the woolen schedule will not be attempted until the measure lowering duties on the farming implements and supplies has been put through the house.

ENTOMBED MEN DIE IN COLLIERY

Scores of Lives Lost in Mine Fire at Throop, Pa.

ESCAPE CUT OFF BY FLAMES

All Employes Escape Except Those Who Were Working in a "Blind Tunnel."

Scranton, Pa., April 8.—One of the most serious mine disasters which has ever visited this section of the mining country occurred at the little village of Throop, a short distance from this city, when the lives of about seventy-five men and boys were snuffed out.

Among those known to have perished are Joseph Evans, who was in charge of the United States mine rescue car; Isaac Dawe, a fire boss, and Walter Knight, a foreman. Evans' death was the result of a defective oxygen charged armor. Charles Enzian, the noted expert in general charge of mine rescue work for the federal government, also was overcome and is said to be in a critical condition.

As rescuers entered the mine they stumbled over three bodies. One of these was Joseph Evans. He was seen to wrench his helmet from his head. It evidently had failed to work. Evans was carried to the open air as quickly as possible, but he had inhaled so much smoke and gas that he died within a few hours. Enzian's experience was similar to that of Evans.

Bodies Are Not Mutilated.

None of the bodies recovered was mutilated, death doubtless having been caused by inhaling flames and gases.

The fire started in an engine house at the opening of a slope leading from the diamond vein 750 feet from the surface. There were 400 men in the mine when the fire started. Escape was completely blocked by fire, smoke and the generated gases, possibly before the men and boys in the "blind tunnel" realized their danger. The other men, scattered in different workings, got out by various exits.

The United States mine rescue car stationed in Wilkesbarre was summoned and later the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western railroad's hospital car and the Lehigh Valley company's mine rescue force from Wilkesbarre came to the scene.

The colliery is owned and operated by the Price-Pancoast Coal company, at the head of which is John R. Bryden, general manager of the Ontario and Western collieries in this region. It is one of the largest and most up to date collieries in the region

ALABAMA CONVICTS DIE IN COLLIERY

More Than One Hundred Victims of Explosion.

Littleton, Ala., April 8.—More than one hundred state and county convicts, a majority of them negroes, were killed by an explosion in the Banner coal mines near here.

One hundred and ninety miners were sent into the underground workings and only about seventy escaped alive.

The Banner mines are in the western part of Jefferson county. They are owned by the Pratt Consolidated Coal company, with offices at Birmingham. Convicts, hired from the various counties throughout the state, are employed in the mines.

SAYS THE STORY IS ABSURD

President Quick to Deny Latest Japanese War Scare.

Washington, April 11.—President Taft moved swiftly to deny the latest Japanese war scare story.

Through Senator Burton of Ohio the president made an emphatic denial of the report from Mexico City that a proposed treaty between Japan and Mexico caused the movement of troops to Texas.

"The president authorized me," said Senator Burton, "to deny in most emphatic terms the story from Mexico City about a secret treaty between Mexico and Japan. There is not one word of truth in it."

TWO HUNDRED DIE IN FIRE

Great Loss of Life in Conflagration in India.

Bombay, British India, April 11.—Two hundred men, women and children were burned to death in a fire which destroyed a thatched structure in which they had gathered for a festival. Five hundred persons were in the building when the fire broke out. There was only one exit and an indescribable panic ensued.

Astrology and War.

It has been stated on what is said to be good authority that a representative of the Prussian government asked of a French astrologer the proper time to pick a quarrel with France. After carefully comparing horoscopes of high officials he answered that any hour in the afternoon as near as possible midway between the 9th and 14th of July, 1870. On the 11th of July William snubbed Benedetti, the French emissary, and on the 12th friendly relations ceased.

STRAIGHTFORWARD TALKS about the

Peoples State Bank

Capital and Surplus $32000

System

This is the day of system and the man who does not systematize his work or business is the one who complains of hard times. The modern man uses a modern system and can figure on the future. One of the most necessary parts of such a system is a Bank Account with a strong, progressive bank. The man or business firm that wants to start now to properly systematize should come in and see us. We can probably offer some valuable suggestions.

THAT TERRIBLE CURSE "DRINK"

There is no man whose condition is so pitiable as the slave to the liquor habit. Excessive indulgence in drink destroys his reputation, undermines his health, paralyzes his intellect, vitiates his morals and ultimately makes him an object of loathing and contempt. His friends forsake him. He brings sorrow and disgrace upon everyone connected with him and drags his family down to misery and poverty. To get drink he squanders the money with which he should supply them. At the end, his children are in rags and dependent upon charity, and his sorrowing wife, old before her time, is condemned to a life of unremitting toil, to give the offspring of an unhappy marriage that support which drink deprives the husband of both the inclination and capacity to supply.

Mrs. Juliet Murray Lang.

But why enlarge on facts with which everyone is familiar? Drink is the great curse of our country and our age. Once a man becomes its victim there is usually little help for him through good resolutions or efforts to reform.

Only extraneous aid can supply the remedy. There is such remedy, however, certain and unfailing. No matter to what depth the victim of the liquor habit has descended the JULIET MURRAY LANG INSTITUTE of St. Paul stands out as beacon light to a ship-wrecked mariner.

Remember it is never too late to mend. Go to the Juliet Murray Lang Institute and be cured from all desire for drink and you will be able forever afterward to show to the whole world that you are in very truth—a man.

Mrs. Lang gives personal attention to every patient aside from the regular physician and nurses in attendance.

How to Tell if Your Hair Is Diseased.

Even if you have a luxuriant head of hair you may want to know whether it is in a healthy condition or not. 98 per cent of the people need a hair tonic.

Pull a hair out of your head; if the bulb at the end of the root is white and shrunken, it proves that the hair is diseased, and requires prompt treatment if its loss would be avoided. If the bulb is pink and full, the hair is healthy.

We want every one whose hair requires treatment to try Rexall "93" Hair Tonic. We promise that it shall not cost anything if it does not give satisfactory results. It is designed to overcome dandruff, relieve scalp irritation, to stimulate the hair roots, tighten the hair already in the head, grow hair and cure baldness.

It is because of what Rexall "93" Hair Tonic has done and our sincere faith in its goodness that we want you to try it at our risk. Two sizes, 50c. and $1.00. Sold only at our store—The Rexall Store.

THE TRIO

By CUTHBERT R. KRAAFT

Copyright by American Press Association, 1911.

Gerald Herbert, George Tisdale and I were bosom friends. It is not often that three persons become inseparable, for two are liable to pull together, leaving the third out in the cold. Our case was an exception. Nevertheless our trio was broken up, not by another man, but by a woman. She came between Gerald and George directly, then between the two of them and me indirectly.

One evening I got a telephone message from Gerald asking me to meet him and George at the gymnasium at 10 o'clock. He said they were to have a fencing match and wished me to be umpire. At that hour we would be alone. When I got there, instead of finding the two together, Gerald met me and said George would join us in a few minutes. Meanwhile Gerald put on a mask, took up a foil and amused himself stabbing the wall. Presently George came in. I noticed he didn't look at or say anything to Gerald, but got ready at once for the match. Before taking position they put the tips of their foils under my nose and Gerald said:

"Take notice of these foils, Charlie. There was an accident at the — Athletic club the other day with foils. The button of one was snapped off and a man got hurt. Afterward it was charged that the man who held the foil purposely used one without a button."

"Go on," I replied. "The buttons on these foils won't come off, I'll guarantee."

They set to, and the way they fenced, I confess, puzzled me. Neither seemed to be trying to pink the other. Neither spoke to the other. They seemed to be fencing against time.

"Oh, get a move on you!" I said. "I don't propose to sit here watching you two fellows go to sleep."

"Go get me a glass of water," said George. "My throat's dry as parched corn."

I went to the cooler and brought him a glass of water. I didn't turn my back on them any longer than necessary to draw the water, but when I turned and went back to them they both looked conscious.

"Been stealing something?" I remarked.

There was no reply from either. George very politely offered the glass to Gerald, who thanked him "very much" and declined. Somehow it struck me that there was something unusual in this politeness between the two. They would more likely have chaffed each other. After taking a sip of the water George set down the glass, and they renewed the contest.

But what a difference! Each man's eye was fixed on the other's. Each watched for a thrust as though his life depended on it and parried it when it came with all the skill he possessed. Every minute they became more earnest. And then I began to notice a look in their faces that surprised and pained me. Their accustomed friendliness was replaced by hate. Their eyes began to gleam; the blood mounted to their faces.

"You two fellows had better stop that fracas," I said. "You're getting riled."

They paid no attention to me. Indeed, I doubt if they heard me, so intent were they on what they were doing. Presently I saw blood running from a gash on the back of Gerald's sword hand.

"Here," I cried, "stop this!"

I was rising to get between them when Gerald made a pass, breaking through George's guard, and I saw the foil go right through the fleshy part of George's arm. When it was withdrawn the sleeve was saturated with blood.

In vain I cried to them to desist. From friends they had become wild animals. They paid no attention to me, and so maddened were they that I did not dare to force myself between them, fearing to get stabbed. A red stream trickling down Gerald's leg was the next evidence of the seriousness of the contest; then when Gerald's point was within an inch of George's heart the latter in the tenth part of a second turned it away. I hurried to find something with which to beat down the weapons and on facing the combatants again saw a door open and Helen Deane step into the room. What I would have needed, a weapon, to accomplish this girl did by her simple presence. The men lowered their foils.

"How did you get on to this?" asked Gerald.

"Your sister overheard."

"Well."

"Drop those foils, both of you, if you value my acquaintance."

The foils rattled on the floor.

"I have known you three friends for a long while," Helen continued. "I will admit that one of you I love."

"Is it I?" asked Gerald quickly.

"No."

"I?" asked George.

"No."

The two men looked at each other; then both turned toward me.

"Charlie?" asked both at once.

"Yes."

They could have knocked me down with a feather. I had worshiped her secretly, but not dreaming that I had any chance with either of the others.

"See the lady home, Charlie," said George. "We'll attend to these cuts."

"It is time you did," I said, and, offering my arm to the prize, I escorted her to her carriage, and we rolled away together.

"It is odd," said the bird store keeper, "but it is true, how people come into a bird store and expect to open up a conversation with a parrot offhand. They fail and then make up their mind that the parrot is worthless. This will apply to a majority of seekers after a talking parrot. They do not give the bird credit for the sense it actually possesses. There are parrots valued at anywhere from $50 to $500 that will not be coaxed into conversation with a stranger nor while he is present, although they are the very best of talkers. Parrots often refuse to perform when there are purchasers looking on, but once the store is clear of them they will chatter away through their whole vocabulary as if their very lives depended on their being heard. This obstinacy often spoils good sales. Most parrots will talk to a girl or woman much quicker and freer than to a boy or a man."—Browning's Monthly.

The Name of Rio de Janeiro.

Rio de Janeiro owes her name to the accident of a date and the mistake of her discovery. When Alphonso de Souza, the Portuguese navigator, found himself in the spacious bay he imagined he had found the mouth of a noble river, and because the day happened to be the 1st of January, 1531, he named the supposed river after the first month of the year. The name was not applied to the city that grew up on the slopes of the hills till many years afterward, but San Sebastian, the original name, is now almost forgotten. Rio as a city purchases the beauty of her site at the cost of health, for the giant ridges that form the beautiful background to the town shut out the breezes that might blow tropical nuisances harmlessly to sea.—London Spectator.

METHODIST CONFERENCE REPORT

Report of District Conference In the M. E. Church Apr. 17, 18 and 19.

The second session of the Fergus Falls district conference this week was held in the Methodist church in this city Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday. The church was choicely decorated with plants, ferns and beautiful flowers, and the ministerial delegates were greatly pleased with their loyal entertainment while in this city. Rev. J. B. Smith, the pastor, was assisted by the members of the church as hosts of the conferance, the entertainment being done in a most gracious and acceptable manner.

The address of welcome was given Monday evening by Prof. J. H. Hay, superintendent of schools, who spoke of the rapid growth of Thief River Falls, of its progressive spirit and its numerous organization for the religious instruction of the citizens. He eulogized the Methodist preachers and their energy, earnestness and agressiveness with devout consecration to the service of the spreading of the truth and the Gospel. His statement, that the preachers, had been taught by the spirit of this age to come into close relationship with the people by personal contact with them in the street, at public functions and in their homes, was loudly applauded by the pastors.

Prof. Hay said the churches were doing great work for the people and that they should be generously supported.

Rev. C. H. Flesher of Bemidji resed the conference sermon on Monday interesting manner which caused much merriment.

Rev. R. G. Green, Akeley, preache dthe conference sermon on Monday evening, Rev. A. A. Meyers, Warren on Tuesday evening and Rev. G. E. Tindall on Wednesday evening. These sermons were able and evangelical in character.

Special music by the church choir under the direction of Mrs. Hay was given every evening and was received with marked enthusiasm. The several solos sung were also appreciated by the preachers and the congregation.

Conference organized with Rev. A. H. McKee, District Superintendent as president, Rev. J. T. Brabner Smith, Sauk Centre, secretary and Rev. R. W. Duel, Osakis, treasurer.

Rev. A. J. Abbott, Menahga, read a paper on Home Missions and Rev. W. J. Hill, Spooner spoke of the great need for a larger edifice for worship at that village, and of the heroic efforts made by the six Methodist preachers, who built the present building immediately after the fire in that region.

Rev. J. S. Kingan, Breckenridge, spoke on the Graded School and a lively discussion was begun by Rev. J. T. Brabner Smith, Sauk Centre, and taken part in by a large number of preachers.

Rev. C. P. Mason, St. Vincent, spoke of the spiritual work of the Epworth League, and a talk on Ministerial Ettiquette was given by Rev. C. W. Hodgson, of Crookston. This led to a very profitable discussion by the delegates, led by Rev. M. W. S. Perry Motley. Rev. George A. Warner, Frazee, spoke of the "All Round Preacher" and this was thoroughly debated by Rev. R. W. Duel of Osakis Rev. G. O. Parish and others.

Rev. C. W. Gilman, Hawley, said that the preacher should be a man of one work, and Rev. G. E. Tindall, Alexandria, spoke of the Preacher as a "Creator of Public Setiment."

Several committees were appointed to decide the time and place of next conference, and to examine local preachers and ministerial candidates. Resolutions were adopted thanking the Methodist people and the citizens, Rev. J. B. Smith, the pastor, and all others who had helped to make the conference so entertaining and profitable.

The secretary was asked to write to Bishop McIntyre and the Board of Bishops to ask for the appointment of Bishop Quayle as president of the next annual conference at Minneapolis and that the time be in the first week of October. Greetings were sent to the Duluth District conference now in session.

This conference has 3,652 members and 261 probationers. It has seventy one Sunday schools with 875 teachers and officers and 6,396 scholars. In this district are sixty-two churches worth $184,000 and thirty-nine parsonages worth $44,659. The churches paid for improvements and indebtedness during the last year $24,060.

The following had their local preacher's licenses renewed: A. Hanson, W. H. Hill, Thomas H. Smith, J. W. Goettman, Fred Herring Rev. Coyburn, and W. A. McKensie was granted local elder's orders; and these were recommended for admission into the annual conference on trial J. E. Rains, Fred W. Barnett, F. P. Hannamann, and James Carter, while J. H. Waters and P. W. Beck were granted renewal of their licenses Rev. H. Henwood was recommended for admission to annual conference on trial.

The following pastors were present at the conference: Rev. G. E. Tindall, Alexandria; R. G. Greene, Akeley; Fred Barnett, Bagley; J. S. Kingan, Breckenridge; C. H. Flesher, Bemidji; George A. Parish, Cass Lake; George A. Warner, Frazee; C. W. Gilman, Hawley; J. W. Rains, Lancaster; A. J. Abbott, Menahga; M. W. S. Perry, Motley; W. H. Hill, Spooner; R. W. Duel, Osakis; J. T. Brabner Smith, Sauk Centre; A. Hanson, St. Hilaire; C. P. Mason, St. Vincent; J. B. Smith, Thief River Falls; A. A. Meyers, Warren; Thomas W. Smith, Warroad; W. C. Hodgson, Crookston.

Twenty-seven charges reported their increase of membership and in an address before the Conference, the Rev. A. H. McKee, the district superintendent said that the reports showed that there had been 747 conversions since the last Annual Conference in September. He hoped that one thousand persons would be converted before the next conference met at Minneapolis. Here were opportunities for five church buildings if they could get money to begin the churches.

The conference sessions were presided over by the Rev. A. H. McKee, District Superintendent who gave some very pointed advice and made several splendid addresses to the pastors.

The delegates were surprised at the growth of Thief River Falls and many of them expressed their great admiration for the numerous public buildings, and especially the public school buildings and the high school, which they visited. The size of the town, its progressiveness and its activity were the source of great admiration by the delegates. Never was the conference better entrtained or the people more kind and enthusiastic in their welcome.

Small Blaze.

Fire broke out in Eugen & Son's Confectionery store at 219 Third St. east last Friday evening. The fire department responded promptly but the building was badly gutted before the blaze was extinguished. The stock which we understand was about to be moved away from there was fully covered by insurance, while the building, owned by Dr. H. Grundy, carried no insurance at all. The origin of the fire is unknown and was likely caused by a discarded match or cigar stump. The occupants of the shop had left it only a short time before the fire broke out.

Married

STENERSON-SANDLAND

Miss Anna Stenerson and Sam K. Sandland were united in marriage at the Linar church last Sunday afternoon, April 16th. The bride is a daughter of Mrs. Gunbild Stenerson of Linar and is well known and respected in that community, while the groom is one of the sturdy, progressive farmers in that section. After the ceremony at the church the wedding party repaired to the groom's farmstead where a reception was given at five o'clock, the friends of the contracting parties wishing them a long, prosperous and happy life, in which the "Press" desires to join.

DAHL AND HANSON.

Miss Hulda Dahl of the town of Smiley and Walter Hanson of Fergus Falls, were united in marriage at the brides' home last Tuesday, April 11th by Justice Tobias Stene also of Smiley. The bride is a daughter of J. Dahl living east of St. Hilaire and is well and favorably known here. The groom is a stranger to most of us but has the respect of all that know him. The happy couple left for Fergus Falls the next day where they will make their home in the future and "live happy ever after," we hope.

IN MEMORIAM

April 11th, the Angel of death folded his great white wings over the life of Julius Pederson, and carried him from this world of suffering to his eternal resting place, where sorrow entereth not and supreme happiness reigns eternal.

He was of most beautiful character. He nobly fulfilled his life's duty and now is receiving his reward.

He was always patient and cheerful, never complaining of his fate; and the same kindly spirit prevailed to the end.

Bowed by sorrow and grief we extend to the sorrowing family and friends our deepest sympathy. His calling away is accomplished by the consoling thoughts that the seperation is only temporary, and that "all is for the best."

A GLANCE AT ITS RECORD

Lynn Haines Reports on The Final Session of the State Legislature.

This is written April fifteenth. Before it is read the session will be over. With legislative conditions so chaotic and uncertain, it is impossible to predict what may happen at the finish but this much is already true; no law making body ever promised more, and fulfilled so little. In my next and last letter I shall attempt to show specifically what was accomplished.

* * * *

To get a comprehensive view of the situation, one must go back two years in the political history of the state. The legislature of 1909 was unprogressive. It was characterized by acts and inclinations favoring the special interests. At the primaries and the general elections the people spoke out in emphatic protest against the reign of professional and corrupt politicians. The result was the smashing of the old guard machine in both branches. A majority of the new members were independent of the interests, with progressive tendencies. It looked as though a complete program of progressive measures would be enacted.

* * * *

Goaded to desperation by this prospect, the reactionaries elected their candidate for speaker and captured the House organization. With that advantage, through the adoption of Cannonized rules the compelling power of patronage and chairmanships, the "corruption cabinet" was able to overcome the handicap of a minority of members directly controlled by the special interests until they had had time to bring enough recruits into the combination to give them control. There isn't space in this letter to explain how that was done. In "the Minnesota Legislature of 1911" I shall go over each step in the system and identify the members who yielded to this or that influence. It is an interesting and instructive study [illegible] changing of insurgents into reactionaries. Some gave way to flattery; some were duped and deceived; others surrendered for committee assignmnts; still others sold their independence for local appropriations, then there are other influences about which one hesitates to speak.

To sum up the situation, the reactioaries serving the speaker's interests, were in almost absolute control of the House before the session had progressed three weeks. They had a dependable majority of between five and ten. And they had their control count, as will be shown when the results are:

* * * *

On the other hand, Lieutenant-Governor Gordon organized the Senate in the interests of the people. He gave the important committees into the hands of progrssives. Apparently the special interests had little opportunity in the upper branch. Conditions continued in that way until the sensational controversy almost instantly converted a well-ordered and Klemer incident in the House. That smoothly working special interest machine into pitiful chaos No words of mine are adequate to describe the change. About forty-five insurgents stood together. Outside of that there was no harmony, and little work. The reactionary leaders realized that they had overplayed the game and were discredited, if not disgraced, before the citizens of the state. They blamed each other, and everybody else. They were, and are irritable. At any time since Mr. Klemer and Dr. Stone charged that the special intrests controlled the House one could start a row of hours duration by merely pointing a finger It didn't matter about the direction. A digit could not straighten itself without indicating some statesman who was sore—and guilty. As a result the closing weeks of the session in the House have been disgraced by language so ungentlemanly and disorder so unstatesmanlike as to suggest a tenderloin saloon rather than a dignified law-making body. At one time about the only special interest could control its crowd was the brewery combine. This situation frightened the big bosses—the ones who press the button from above. Accordingly they turned their attention to the Senate. They feared that their House organization might go to pieces and lose control. Big politicians close to high state officials joined with envoys of the steel trust to safeguard themselves and their masters through a belated effort to influence the situation in the Senate. Their labors were not in vain. The list of Senate casualities which I shall give next week will corroborate

Communications.

In the last issue of the Press we notice a few correspondences from farmers in regard to sending for goods to the so-called "catalog houses." I am a farmer myself and have often thought, how it is that those houses can sell cheaper than our home merchants, and finally have come to the conclusion that our way of buying, is one thing that increases the cost of running a store. Now, let us take a pair of shoes, for example. A person sending to Sears, Roebuck & Co., for shoes sends cash with his order, gives number and size wanted—all the clerk there has to do is to take it from the shelf and wrap it up. The profit is made in about a minute. The same man goes to the local store to get a pair of shoes. The clerk asks him what he wants. "A pair of shoes," is generally the reply." After another question the size is given. The clerk asks, "Dress or everyday shoe?" The customer says, "Let me see what you've got." Five or six pair are taken down, closely examined, finally a pair is tried on, and, if it fits, the bargain is probably made, after trying to get them a quarter cheaper than the price marked. Taking all into consideration, the clerk has spent about from 15 to 30 minutes in selling that pair of shoes. In the same time Sears, Roebuck & Co. clerk has made at least 10 pair ready for shipment. No wonder they can sell a little cheaper.

And now for average buying, he sends to some house a good sized order, the cash goes with it and then he waits patiently till it comes. If it doesn't come in three weeks it may come in four. In the local store, the most of the patrons come in between 10 a. m., and 4 p. m., expecting to be waited on right away. All goods are closely examined and if not satisfactory, simply are not taken. This way of doing business compels the store-keeper to hire 3 times as many clerks as Sears, Roebuck & Co., for the same amount of business. Then he waits patiently till the goods come from there, but if he has to wait one half hour at the local store he feels something is wrong.

And then, besides that, he don't always get what he wants when he sends for it, but he generally takes what he gets, for they probably did not have exactly what he wanted, and Sears, Roebuck & Co. know well enough, that goods sent out into the country, have to be pretty bad before the trouble is taken to return them.

Suppose that's enough for this time, though we could give a whole lot more.

Yours respectfully,

N. Bundlund.

COMMUNICATED REPLIES

In an article published in the Press of last week, I notice our brother farmer replying to a letter written by one of our merchants, regarding sending to Catalog Houses. Brother farmer, let us be associates; build up our town and country. It does not pay for either of us to boost nor build up Chicago. We know and you know we must have a profit on the goods we handle, so must the Catalog House.

The difference is so small that if you will take under consideration the diffetence in quality, freight and other expenses connected therewith, that it is not worth your time writing out the order.

It must be a small difference, because they buy a great deal of their goods from the same manufactures and jobbers as we do, only having special contracts for larger qualities odds, ends and left over's, therefore getting inferior qualities. Now brother farmer, take in consideration what it is worth to you to have a good prospering town in your locality A good market for your produce. What is it worth to you to come to one of your merchants when your pocket book is empty. You ask for credit and get it, and if you are a gentleman you pay when you can. When you bring your farm produce we take it off your hands. When your boy or girl wishes to attend schools without cost to you, we are always at hand to reasonably accomodate you. We pay taxes, help build churches, schools, roads etc.

Stop! Figure up the very little you gain by sending your money away. Buy at home. Help build up our town, let all be pleasant thereby benefiting yourselves a score times more than when you send your money away

A brother,

Merchant and Farmer,

The Republican county committee had a meeting Wednesday and filled the vacancy in its Chairmanship by electing Dan Shaw for that office. CITY MAY ACQUIRE ST. HILAIRE DAM

Commercial Club Makes Re-Commendation to council.

There is a move on foot, started by members of the Commercial Club to have the city of Thief River Falls acquire the St. Hilaire dam, and necessary lands therewith. The executive committee of the club appeared by a committee of two (Barzen and Hanson) before the council last Tuesday evening and made representations to that body of the needs of the city for more, and more certain, power, and urged that body to take immediate action looking toward the acquirement of the St. Hilaire dam. A committee of three of the council was appointed to accompany Mr. Barzen and Mr. C. L. Hanson to inspect the dam on Thursday.

The same committee was instructed last night to open negotiations with the owners.

Base Ball.

Last Monday evening the local enthusiasts met at Flynn's barber shop and decided that Thief River Falls should have a base ball team. A canvass of the possible material shows that there are about 20 men who know considerable about the game, and no doubt there are others not heard from yet.

In view of the fact that there is so much good material in sight, the men thought it best that the team be made up entirely of local players. This decision, too, is in accordance with the wishes of the business men who have always helped to make the team a success. It insures that the team will be run as economically as possible, and with present prospects means that a first class quality of ball will be played.

No announcement of the lineup is given at this time because the team will not be selected until the men have gotten out and shown what they can do. The best men are going to be selected. No man has any more "pull" than another so, if you have ever played ball, get out and show what you can do. You are cordially invited.

While the team will be composed of local men, who are expected to play because they love the game of base ball, it was thought an efficient executive staff should be elected to look after the affairs of the team. C. A. Peterson, of the C. O. D. Clothing Co., was unanimously elected president and manager. Fred Nielai, O. Torrison and C. A. Peterson were chosen to act as a board of directors. Alfred Worner was selected as the best man for secretary, and no better man than Nielai could have been found for treasurer. Geo. Curran and O. Torrison have agreed to see that the team has a good playing field Joe Flynn, Geo. Curran, O. Torrison, C. A. Peterson and Fred Nielai were chosen to further investigate the attitude of the citizens and business men towards a local ball team.

The selection of a field captain was deferred until a later date so as to insure his being the popular selection of the men who make the team.

The next base ball meeting is called for Monday evening, May first at Flynn's barber shop. If you are a base ball payer, or are interested in base ball get into the game and attend these meetings. Catch the base ball spirit. Help boost Thief River Falls. Get out and limber up a bit.

The first game of the season will be played Sunday at the Fair Grounds between The Commercial Travelers and the home team. No admission fee. The Travelers are well organized and expect to play some real ball this summer. If you want to have a genuinely good time, attend the dance given by the Commercial Men at the Auditorium tonight.

WHAT CONGRESS IS DOING

The Canadian Reciprocity Bill Leads to the Underwood Bill.

Washington, D. C., April 20, 1911.

The thick-and-thin progressive Republicans of the House are not altogether pleased with their committee assignments, as announced a few days ago. Lenroot and Madison, two House members who have figured prominently in insurgent activities and councils, were placed on the important committee on rules. It was stated from Mann-Cannon headquarters that this action was taken in recognition of the Insurgents and in the spirit of fair play. But the Simonpure Insurgents take violent exception to this interpretation. They say that that Mann, acting upon the suggestion of Cannon, went over the heads of some of the older Insurgents and picked out two members, Lenroot and Madison, one of whom is just beginning on his second term in Congress, to serve on the important committe on rules. They further assert that Lenroot and Madison made an unauthorized bargain with the House regular Republicans, and that as a reward for their dealings with the Mann-Cannon crowd they got their committee assignments. They point out that if the regular Republican organization had desired to give fair recognition to Insugency it would have selected some such man as Cooper of Wisconsin or Norris of Nebraska to place on the rules committee. Both of these men have been in Congress for several terms and are outspoken in their Insurgency. Cooper was given a rather inferior place on foreign affairs, while Norris goes way down the list on the judiciary committee.

In Minnesota Davis stays on Insular affairs and is ranking minority member on Claims Committee. Volstead is well up to the front on Public Lands, his old committee and is also on Education. Steenerson is number six on the minority on Post Offices and Post Roads. Formerly chairman of the Militia committee which gave him a suit of rooms and at times a committee clerk, he is now obliged to locate his office in one of the single rooms of the House Office Building. Lindbergh, really wanted a place on Banking and Currency, but instead was retained on Claims.

Anderson of Minnesota, the newly-seated Insurgent member from the first district, drew Elections No. 2 and Pensions. Mr. Anderson is a veteran of the Spanish-American War and this may have had something to do with his being placed on the Pensions Committee, an assignment of no mean importance, although he did not request this place. The Pensions Committee handles all pension bills and cases growing out of the Spanish-American War and the regular army serivce. Mr. Anderson takes Mr. Hepp's place on the committee, and will be on a sub-committee to which will be referred all pension bills of the class mentioned above introduced by members from Minnesota, Wisconsin, Nebraska and Kansas. There is considerable detail work on this committee and the Minnesota member will have an opportunity to gain much valuable legislative experience in connection with his assignment.

Shortly before Mr. Tawney retired from Congress the then first district congressman made a thorough cleaning-up of all his public documents. A carload of books was sent into the district in one consignment, and scattered broadcast among Mr. Tawney's followers. When Mr. Anderson took his seat the fourth of March he found himself without any public document to his credit. He purchased a quantity of the government publications most in demand and in this way has been able to tide over for a time until the usual quota of books and documents was placed to his credit.

The Democrats are making a strong play for the farmer vote of the Northwest. The Canadian Reciprocity Bill, which will shortly pass the House, if not already passed, is well known among Democrats as an unpopular measure with the farmers. To offset its unpopularity with this class, the Underwood bill has been introduced "in the interest of the farmer and the ultimate consumer." This bill called the "farmers' bill" proposes a partial revision of the tariff on a number of the articles that the farmers use. It admits duty free many of the leading food stuffs and such articles as lumber. The duties are lowered on farm implements, harness, leather, boots and shoes, tools, wire fencing, twine, bagging and other miscellaneous manufactures. Of course, the purpose of the Under-

TORGERSON

It has been a long time since the Reiner people have heard the tales about home so I'll take time to write up a few that I know of.

This Northwest was surprised with a fine rain last week.

Mr. and Mrs. C. Johnson were over to Hungry Island last Sunday to visit the newly married couple, Mr. and Mrs. Jesse Marrel.

Seeding has been delayed for a few days on account of the rain, but will be in full blast from now and on. As the fields are dry every acre that is plowed will be seeded.

Anton Knudson, our wood sawyer, has finished up work sawing for this spring. Hope he will return next fall, as the Buzz-saw beats the Buck-saw.

The telephones have been on the sick list since the rain, but hope they will soon dry up so the voice will travel freely around.

C. Johnson has been busy hauling hay for some days so as to be free to work in the fields later when the fields are ripe for it.

B. Baker has been sawing lumber these days and is getting ready for spring work.

Mrs. L. Roseland was over to Albert Olson's last week and bought two sheep.

August Knudson is confined to his bed with the measles. We hope he will soon be up and around again.

Miss Vive Olson of Esplee returned from Thief River Falls last week, where she has been working for some time.

If anyone has a house to move call on Anton Knudson, as he moved one for himself and did a fine job—we think he'll do the same for you.

GERMANTOWN

Well, boys and girls, did you find plenty of Easter eggs? Probably the rabbit thought it is no use as eggs are cheap.

We nearly came having a white Easter.

The snow and the rain delayed the spring work for awhile.

The Creamery opened its doors for business last Friday, and a lot of cream was received. Prospects for a good season are good, even tho butter is way down in price.

Frank Kainz bought a horse last week so he thinks he can make up for lost time.

The walking dredge north of Germantown has started working. A few charges of dymanite helped to make things go.

BRAY

Very little has been done in the fields around here on account of the wet weather.

Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Olsen visited at Dan Johnson's in Sanders Sunday.

Fred Swanson has been on the sick list the last week.

Blanche Lind completed a successful term of school in Dist. No. 69 Thursday.

Elvina Bloom, the schoolma'am in district 180, left for her home in Norden Friday to spend Easter vacation. She was accompanied by Blanche Lind.

Eunice Lind of Sanders has been visiting with her sister, Blanche during the last week.

Mrs. C. A. Nelson has been visiting with friends in Thief River Falls the last week.

IMMENSE CONSIGNMENT OF ORANGES ARRIVES.

The largest consignment of oranges that has ever been received in this city has arrived. more than 3,000,000 oranges have been sent here from California. These oranges are absolutely the finest that have ever been shipped out of California and Thief River Falls has been especially favored in the quality of the oranges shipped.

The occasion of this immense consignment is a special sale by the California Fruit Growers Exchange. The oranges have been sent here on a special fast train in order that they might not be injured or delayed in transit.

Every fruit dealer in the city has stocked up with these famous Sunkist Oranges, and every dealer will sell them at lower prices than oranges of such fine quality have ever been sold in this city before. It is freely predicted by the dealers interested that every one of these 3,000.000 delicious Sunkist oranges will be sold long before next week is ended.

A Few Thoughts on Money.

Money, otherwise known as tin, dough, cush, gelt, rocks, etc.

The corpuscles of national circulation which indicate the strength of our constitution.

It is often called a curse. Some swear by it, others swear for it, and still others swear at it.

It often causes a species of mental derangement or delirium called money mania. Many are willing to be thus inoculated.

It is the feature of social distinction. It is the measure of intelligence—those who have it are wise, those who have it not are foolish. Possession of it entitles one to the use of a monogram.

Though a medium of exchange, it has no connection with souls or astral bodies.

It is the religion of today, often called moneytheism. Preachers pray for it; laymen lay for it.

It is the be all and the end all. Children cry for it, women sigh for it, men die for it, and all lie for it.—Smart Set.

Wrecked by a Knife Blade.

A ship was once wrecked on the Irish coast. The captain was a careful one. Nor had the weather been of so severe a kind as to explain the wide distance which the vessel had swerved from her proper course. The ship went down, but so much interest attached to the disaster that a diving bell was sunk. Among other portions of the vessel that were examined was the compass that was swung on the deck, and inside the compass box was detected a bit of steel, which appeared to be the small point of a pocket-knife blade. It was learned that the day before the wreck a sailor who had been set cleaning the compass had used his pocket knife in the process and had unceremoniously broken off the point and left it remaining in the box. That bit of knife blade exerted its influence on the compass and to a degree that deflected the needle from its proper bent and vitiated it as an index of the ship's direction. That bit of knife blade wrecked the vessel.

AGAINST PACT WITH CANADA

Whip Dwight States How Republicans Will Vote.

FEW FAVOR THE AGREEMENT

Declaration Is Made After Careful Canvass of Membership That Substantial Majority of the Republicans Will Vote In the Negative. Passage of the Bill Seems Assured, Though, by Safe Margin.

Washington, April 18.—"After a thorough canvass of the Republican membership of the house I can state positively that a substantial majority of the party will vote against the Canadian reciprocity bill," said Representative Dwight of New York, the Republican whip. The bill is to be put upon its passage this week.

This will not prevent its passage, even though a number of the Democrats follow the course now indicated and vote against the majority of their party. When the reciprocity bill passed the house in the last session a majority of the Republicans voted against it and the Democratic majority in favor of it has greatly increased in the new congress.

Five speakers participated in the debate. Representative Fordney of Michigan, a Republican member of the ways and means committee, and Representative Lenroot of Wisconsin, a progressive Republican, spoke at length against the bill. Representatives Harrison of New York and Peters of Massachusetts, Democratic members of the ways and means committee, and Representative Crumpacker of Indiana, Republican, advocated its passage.

Mr. Lenroot gave an emphatic statement of progressive policies and views. Questioned from the Democratic side he declared that he opposed the reciprocity agreement because he believed it actually increased many duties. He declared that if the Democrats were sincere in their desire to put more articles on the free list they would attach the free list to the reciprocity bill. He accused them of wanting the president to veto their free list bill when it finally passed, so as to make political capital for them.

Boy Kills His Sister.

Ivanhoe, Minn., April 18.—Stella Kabot, aged twenty, daughter of John Kabot, living four miles north of here, died as the result of a gunshot wound inflicted upon her accidentally by a younger brother who in walking away from the Kabot home swung the gun across his shoulder and in so doing caused the weapon to be discharged. The entire charge entered the girl's back.

First Ore for the Docks.

Two Harbors, Minn., April 18.—The first loading of ore from the Vermilion and Mesaba range for 1911 has commenced at the Zenith mine at Ely and the Norman mine at Virginia. A total of about sixty-five carloads a day will be loaded. Both mines are steel corporation properties. Other mines are expected to start soon.

A Bleak and Barren Coast.

Bleak and barren is the west coast of South America, where it is always cloudy, yet never rains, where it is chilly even up under the equator, where never a tree nor a blade of grass is to be seen—only the parched and bunghy foothills of the Andes, swept with windrows of sand, and behind them fleeting glimpses of the towering peaks of the main mountain chain. Probably nowhere else in the world is there a seacoast of equal extent so desolate and uninviting.

Harbors there are few or none. Coquimbo, 200 miles north of Valparaiso, and Callao are safe and of commercial value. But, although there are few harbors, there are many ports. The Pacific ocean, true on this coast, at least, to its name, makes it possible for a vessel to anchor almost anywhere to take and leave cargo by means of lighters. Loading and unloading the lighters at the shore are made possible by artificial breakwaters or a fortunate conformation of the land which affords shelter for small craft.—New York Post.

When You Break Cut Glass.

An accident to cut glass invariably plunges the owner of it into clouds of gloom, but often these clouds have silver linings. Before throwing the pieces away examine each piece separately and see if it could be cut down into anything smaller. Shops which deal in cut glass usually have a cutter on the premises. A case is told of a bride who upon entering the dining room arrived in time to see, but not prevent, her maid from pulling instead of pushing the extension table, and as it separated in the middle several pieces of valuable cut glass which had been placed there during the cleaning time fell through with a crash to the floor. It seemed a hopeless accident, but a rose bowl was cut down from a decanter, following the pattern near the neck, which had broken off; a small violet holder was cut down from a tall vase, a tiny sugar bowl from a vinegar cruet, and a small bonbon dish was saved from a larger cut glass bowl.—Woman's Home Companion.

Probably There Now.

Bobby—Pa, did you ever see an arm of the sea?

Father—Yes.

"Where was it?"

"It was hugging the shore the last I saw of it."—Smart Set.

WHERE HE LEARNED IT

By LOUISE B. CUMMINGS

Copyright by American Press Association, 1911.

This is a story of Kentucky nearly a century ago.

One day a young man dressed not in the buckskin or linsey woolsey of the times, but in a costume that smacked rather of Europe than America, alighted from the coach at a tavern and called for supper and a room. It was at the end of the stage route, and the young man was obliged to proceed to his home farther south on horseback. This was the reason for his remaining overnight. There was not much amusement to be found in such a place, and after supper, hearing the strains of a violin in a saloon across the way, he concluded to walk over and see what was going on. At one end of the room was a bar, and at the other was the fiddler, who, sitting on a platform of boards set on barrels, was playing "The Arkansaw Traveler." There was a story connected with the music, which the fiddler told, every now and again stopping to go on with the tune. At tables scattered here and there were men, most of them in hunting costumes, playing cards.

At the entrance of a young man in civilized dress every one looked up. The newcomer, being embarrassed, was about to retreat when one of the card players called out:

"Don't go, younker. Yo're the purtiest thing we've ever seen in these parts. Let's have a look at them clothes."

"Those clothes," said the stranger, "came from a long way off. As soon as I get settled at home I'll probably go in for the costume of the country."

"Whar did yo' come from, anyway?"

"I've been to Germany."

"Germany!" exclaimed every one in the room. They had never before heard of any one who talked pure American coming from across the Atlantic.

"What war yo' doin' thar?" asked one.

"Studying."

"Did you go from hyar?"

"Yes. My father lives in the blue grass region. My name is Morgan."

"All right, sonny. If yo' hail from old Kaintuck you're all right, no matter what kind of a rig yo' got on. My name's Speers. Step up and have somep'n."

"I don't drink anything except beer. I reckon I can't get that here."

"Beer! No. We don't drink nothin' but pure Kaintuck corn juice down hyar. Step up and have some o' that."

"Thank you; I don't drink whisky."

"Don't know how, eh? Well, we'll teach yo'."

"You can't teach me, for I won't learn."

The speaker reached down between his shoulder blades and drew forth a bowie knife a foot long and began to poke the young man with its point toward the bar. Several of the others protested that the young man should not be forced to drink what he didn't wish to drink. Others maintained that if there was to be a fight he should be furnished with arms to defend himself.

"Is it drink or fight?" asked the man with the knife.

"It isn't drink," said the other resolutely.

"Well, then, it's fight. What weepons do you like?"

"I'd as soon have a knife like the one you're flourishing as anything. But I don't wish to fight. I'd much prefer to go over to the tavern and let you drink all the whisky you like."

"Give him a bowie!" cried his enemy.

A man in the crowd handed Morgan a knife of the exact length of that of his antagonist, and he had no sooner got his fingers about its handle than his enemy made a dash for him with his knife raised high in the air. The youngster caught it on his own knife, making a gash in his enemy's hand from which dripped the red blood. Speers unlocked his knife and made an under pass. Again the weapon was caught, and a fresh stream ran from its owner's hand. Then followed a series of passes by Speers, Morgan standing solely on the defensive. A dozen times he could have punctured his enemy in any part of the body he chose, but he refrained.

The interest in the fight among the onlookers was intense. The skill of Morgan won a number to his side, who kept calling, "Now's yo' chance, younker!" "Let drive!" "Finish him!" But Morgan contented himself with blocking his enemy's thrusts. Finally Morgan called to the crowd:

"Do you think this has gone on long enough?"

"Yes. Finish it up."

"All right."

Every one expected to see him plunge his knife into Speers' body, but instead of that he wedged his own blade in between Speers' fingers and the hilt of his knife, gave his own bowie a fling, and Speers' weapon went up to the ceiling and, falling, stood up in the floor on its point.

All gathered around the victor and were eager to hear where he had learned to handle a knife with such proficiency. He told them that three years before his father had sent him to a German university. He had joined the dueling corps and had shown a special facility for handling the small sword. He had worsted one antagonist after another and shortly before leaving the university had been declared the champion for that year.

Colors Warm and Cold.

One clear, cold winter's day Benjamin Franklin spread a number of handkerchiefs carefully on a level stretch of snow. One of the handkerchiefs was black, another white and the others of various colors. Some time afterward he returned and removed the handkerchiefs carefully one by one, measuring the depth of snow under each. Under the black handkerchief he found that the snow had melted considerably; under a red handkerchief, almost as much; under a blue handkerchief, very little, and under the white one scarcely any. By this simple experiment he learned that color has a great deal to do with the warmth of clothing. White sheds the sun's heat almost as well as an oilskin sheds water; blue is nearly as heat proof; green is less so; yellow is a warm color, red a still warmer color, while black soaks up almost all the sun's heat that strikes it. Make the experiment some time and you will see why black clothes are out of place in the summer time and white ducks in winter.—Christian Herald.

The Thunderer's Logographs.

Some of the most serious riots recorded in the printing trades occurred in 1814, when the London Times was first printed by steam, and a number of workmen discharged through this innovation sought to wreck the office in Printing House square. Long before this the Times had been printed logographically—that is to say, the proprietor conceived the happy idea of having words cast entire to save the compositors the trouble of collecting type. The logographs most in demand were: Dreadful, robbery, atrocious outrage, fearful calamity, alarming explosion, loud cheers, interesting female. One hundredweight of each of these was always kept in stock. Interesting females no longer figure in newspaper reports, but otherwise the cliches of journalism seem to have altered but little.—London Chronicle.

His Protest.

A bright little lad heard his parents talking about the salaries of teachers. "I don't see why they should pay the teachers," he said very seriously, "when we children do all the work."

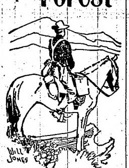
Cavanagh, Forest Ranger

The Great Conservation Novel

By HAMLIN GARLAND

Copyright, 1910, by Hamlin Garland



Ross composed himself and told his story briefly. "I'm at Kettle Ranch postoffice. Now listen. The limit of the cattleman's ferocity has been reached. As I rode down here to get into communication with a doctor for a sick herder I came upon the scene of another murder and burning. The fire is still smoldering. At least two bodies are in the embers."

At last, bit by bit, from hurried speech, the supervisor derived the fact, the location, the hour, and directed the herder to ride back and guard the remains till the sheriff arrived.

"Keep it all quiet," warned Ross, "and get the sheriff and a doctor to come up here as quick as you can. What is this country coming to?" he cried in despair. "Will this deed go unpunished like the rest?"

Redfield's voice had lost its optimistic ring. "I don't know; I am stunned by it all. Don't do anything rash, Ross. Wait till I come. Perhaps this is the turning point out here. I'll be up at the earliest moment."

The imbittered and disheartened ranger then called up Lee Virginia, and the sound of her sweet voice turned his thoughts to other and in a sense more important matters, for when she heard his name she cried out with such eager longing and appeal that his heart leaped. "Oh, I wish you were here! Mother has been worse today. She is asking for you. Can't you come down and see us? She wants to tell you something."

"I can't—I can't!" he stammered. "I—I—I'm a long way off, and I have important work to do. Tell her I will come tomorrow. Dear girl, there is a sick man far up on the mountain side with no one to care for him but a poor old herder who is in danger of falling sick himself. I must go back to them; but, believe me, I will come just as soon as my duties will let me. You understand me, don't you?"

Her voice was fainter as she said. "Yes, but I—it seems hard to wait."

"I know. Your voice has helped me. I was in a black mood when I came here. I'm going back now to do my work, and then I will come to you. Goodby."

Strangely beautiful and very subtle was the vibrant stir of that wire as it conveyed back to his ear the little sigh with which she made answer to his plea. He took his way upward in a mood which was meditative, but no longer bitter.

CHAPTER XV.

SHADOWS ON THE MIST.

THE decision which Cavanagh made between love and duty distinguished the officer from the man, the soldier from the civilian. He did not hesitate to act, and yet he suffered a mental conflict as he rode back toward the scene of that inhuman sacrifice on the altar of [illegible]reed.

[illegible] will be hours before any part of [illegible]ff's posse can reach the falls, [illegible] they take to the swiftest [illegible] other long hours [illegible] I can ride down [illegible] and a night [illegible] before I [illegible]." And [illegible] from [illegible] stress [illegible] mountain side.

Halfway to the [illegible] cepted by an old [illegible] work on an irrigating di[illegible] road. He seemed very ner[illegible] very inquisitive, and as he quest[illegible] the ranger his eyes were like those of a dog that fears his master's hand. Ross wondered about this afterward, but at the moment his mind was busy with the significance of this patient toiler with a spade. He was a prophetic figure in the most picturesque and sterile land of the stockman. "Here, within twenty miles of this peaceful fruit grower," he said, "is the crowning infamy of the freebooting cowboy."

He wondered as he rode on whether the papers of the state would make a jest of this deed. "Will this be made the theme for caustic comment in the eastern press for a day and then be forgotten?"

As his hot blood cooled he lost faith in even this sacrifice. Could anything change the leopard west into the tameness and serenity of the ox? "No," he decided; "nothing but death will do that. This generation, these fierce and bloody hearts, must die. Only in that way can the tradition of violence be overcome and a new state reared."

At the foot of the toilsome, upward winding trail he dismounted and led his weary horse. Over his head and about halfway to the first hilltop lay a roof of fleecy vapor, faint purple in color and seamless in texture. Through this he must pass, and it symbolized to him the line of demarcation between the plain and the mountain, between order and violence.

Slowly he led his horse along the mountain side, grasping with eager desire at every changing aspect of the marvelous mountain scene. It was infinitely more gorgeous, more compelling, than his moonlight experience the night before.

As he led his horse out upon a projecting point of rocky ledge to rest his love for the range came back upon him with such power that tears misted his eyes and his throat ached. "Where else will I find such scenes as this?" he asked himself. "Where in all the lowlands could such splendors shine? How can I leave this high world in which these wonders come and go? I will not! Here will I bring my bride and build my home. This is my world."

But the mist grew gray, the aureole of fire faded, the sun went down behind the hills, and the chill of evening deepened on the trail, and as he reapproached the scene of man's inhumanity to man the thought of camping there beside those charred limbs called for heroic resolution. He was hungry, too, and as the air pinched he shivered.

"At the best the sheriff cannot reach here before midnight," he said, and settled down to his unsought, revolting vigil.

His one relief lay in the mental composition of a long letter to Lee Virginia, whose life at that moment was a comfort to him. "If such purity, such sweetness, can come from violence and vulgarity then surely a new and splendid state can rise even out of the ashes of these murdered men. Perhaps this is the end of the old," he mused, "perhaps this is the beginning of the new," and as he pondered the last faint crimson died out of the west. "So must the hate and violence die out of America," he said, "leaving the clear, sweet air of liberty behind."

He was near to the poet at the moment, for he was also the lover. His allegiance to the great republic stood the test. His faith in democracy was shaken, but not destroyed. "I will wait," he decided. "This shall be the sign. If this deed goes unavenged then will I put off my badge and my uniform and go back to the land where for a hundred years at least such [illegible]s as these have been impossible."

[illegible]uilt a fire as night fell to serve [illegible]s a beacon and as a defense [illegible]st the cold. He felt himself [illegible]rdly remote in this vigil. From [illegible]s far height he looked abroad upon the tumbled plain as if upon an ocean dimly perceptible, yet august. "At this moment," he said, "curious and perhaps guilty eyes are wondering what my spark of firelight may mean."

His mind went again and again to that tall old man in the ditch. What was the meaning of his scared and sorrowful glance? Why should one so peacefully employed at such a time and in such a place wear the look of a hunted deer? What meant the tremor in his voice?

Was it possible that one so gentle should have taken part in this deed? "Preposterous suspicion, and yet he had a guilty look."

At last, far in the night, he heard the snort of a horse and the sound of voices. The law (such as it was) was creeping up the mountain side in the person of the sheriff of Chauvenet county and was about to relieve the ranger from his painful responsibility as guardian of the dead.

At last he came, this officer of the law, attended like a Cheyenne chief by a dozen lesser warriors of various conditions and kinds, but among them—indeed, second only to the sheriff—was Hugh Redfield, the forest supervisor, hot and eager with haste.

As they rode up to the fire the officer called out: "Howdy, ranger? How about it?"

Ross stated briefly, succinctly, what he had discovered, and as he talked other riders came up the hill and gathered closely around to listen in wordless silence—in guilty silence, the ranger could not help believing.

Redfield spoke. "Sheriff Van Horne, you and I have been running cattle in this country for nearly thirty years, and we've witnessed all kinds of shooting and several kinds of hanging, but when it comes to chopping and burning men I get off. I shall personally offer a reward of $1,000 for the apprehension of these miscreants, and I hope you'll make it your solemn duty to hunt them to earth."

"You won't have far to go," remarked Ross significantly.

"What do you mean?" asked the sheriff.

"I mean this slaughter, like the others that have taken place, was the work of cattlemen who claim this range. Their names are known to us all."

A silence followed—so deep a silence that the ranger was convinced of the fact that in the circle of his listeners stood those who, if they had not shared in the slaughter, at least knew the names of the guilty men.

At last the sheriff spoke, this time with a sigh. "I hope you're all wrong, Cavanagh. I'd hate to think any constituent of mine had sanctioned this job. Give me that lantern, Curtis."

The group of ranchers dismounted and followed the sheriff over to the grewsome spot, but Redfield stayed with the ranger.

"Have you any suspicion, Ross?"

"No, hardly a suspicion. However, you know as well as I that this was not a sudden outbreak. This deed was planned. It represents the feeling of many cattlemen—in everything but the extra horror of its execution. That was the work of drunken, infuriated men. But I am more deeply concerned over Miss Wetherford's distress. Did she reach you by telephone tonight?"

"No. What's the trouble?"

"Her mother is down again. I telephoned her, and she asked me to come to her, but I cannot go, for I have a case of smallpox up on the hill. Ambro, the Basque herder, is down with it, and another herder is up there alone with him. I must go back to them. But meanwhile I wish you would go to the Fork and see what you can do for her."

His voice, filled with emotion, touched Redfield, and he said, "Can't I go to the relief of the herder?"

"No; you must not think of it. You are a man with a family. But if you can find any one who has had the smallpox send him up. The old herder who is nursing the patient is not strong and may drop at any moment. Then it's up to me."

The men came back to the campfire conversing in low tones, some of them cursing in tones of awe. One or two of them were small farmers from Deer Creek, recent comers to the state, or men with bunches of milk cows, and to them this deed was awesome.

The sheriff followed, saying: "Well, there's nothing to do but wait till morning. The rest of you men better go home. You can't be of any use here."

For more than three hours the sheriff and Redfield sat with the ranger, waiting for daylight, and during this time the name of every man in the region was brought up and discussed. Among others, Ross mentioned the old man in the ditch.

"He wouldn't hurt a bumblebee," declared the sheriff. "He's got a bunch of cattle, but he's the mildest old man in the state. He's the last rancher in the country to even stand for such work. What made you mention him?"

"I passed him as I was riding back," replied Cavanagh, "and he had a scared look in his eyes."

The sheriff grunted. "You imagined all that. The old chap always has a kind of meek look."

It was nearly noon of a glorious day as Cavanagh, very tired and very hungry, rode up to the sheep herder's tent. Wetherford was sitting in the sun calmly smoking his pipe, the sheep were feeding not far away, attended by the dog, and an air of peace covered his sunlit rocky world.

"How is the Basque?" asked the ranger.

Wetherford pointed upward. "All over."

"Then it wasn't smallpox?"

"I reckon that's what it was; it sure was fierce. I judge it's a case of Injun burial—no ceremony—right here in the rocks. I'll let you dig the hole (I'm just about all in), but mind you keep to the windward all the time. I don't want you spotted."

Cavanagh understood the necessity for these precautions, but first of all came his own need of food and rest. Turning his tired horse to grass, he stretched himself along a grassy, sunny cranny between the rocks and there ate and afterward slept, while all about him the lambs called and the conies whined.

He was awakened by a pebble tossed upon him, and when he arose, stiff and sore, but feeling stronger and in better temper, the sun was wearing low. Setting to work at his task, he threw the loose rock out of a hollow in the ledge near by, and to this rude sepulcher Wetherford dragged the dead man, refusing all aid, and there piled a cairn of rocks above his grave.

The ranger took a hand at the end and rolled some huge bowlders upon the grave to insure the wolves' defeat.

"Now burn the bedding," he commanded. "The whole camp has got to go, and your clothing, too, after we get down the hill."

"What will we do with the sheep?"

"Drive them over the divide and leave them."

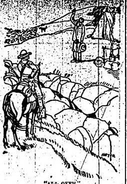
All these things Wetherford did, and, leaving the camp in ashes behind him, Cavanagh drove the sheep before him on his homeward way. As night fell the dog, at his command, rounded them up and put them to bed, and the men went on down the valley, leaving the brave brute on guard, pathetic figure of faithful guardianship.

"It hurts me to desert you, old fellow," called the ranger, looking back; "but there's no help for it. I'll come up in the morning and bring you some biscuit."

It was long after dark when they entered the canyon just above the cabin, and Wetherford was shivering from cold and weakness.

"Now, you pull up just outside the gate and wait there till I bring out some blankets. Then you've got to strip to the skin and start the world all over again," said Cavanagh. "I'll build a fire here, and we'll cremate your past. How about it?"

"I'm willing," responded Wetherford. "You can burn everything that belongs to me but my wife and my girl."



"ALL OVER."

All through the ceremony which followed ran this self banter. "I'll be all ranger, barring a commission," he said, with a grin as he put on the olive yellow shirt and a pair of dusty green trousers. "And here goes my past!" he added as he tossed his contaminated rags upon the fire.

"What a corking opportunity to make a fresh start," commented Cavanagh. "I hope you see it."

"I see it, but it's hard to live up to your mark."

When every precaution had been taken the ranger led the freshly scrubbed, scoured and transformed fugitive to his cabin.

"Why, man, you're fit for the state legislature," he exclaimed as they came into the full light. "My clothes don't precisely meet every demand you make upon them, but they give you an air of command; I wish your wife could see you now." Then, seeing that Wetherford was really in earnest, he added: "You can stay with me as long as you wish. Perhaps in time you might be able to work into the service as a guard, although the chief is getting more and more insistent on real foresters."

There were tears in Wetherford's eyes as he said: "You cannot realize what this clean, warm uniform means to me. For nine years I wore the prison stripes. It is ten years since I was dressed like a man."

"You need not worry about food or shelter for the present," replied Cavanagh gently. "Grub is not costly here, and house rent is less than nominal, so make yourself at home and get strong."

Wetherford lifted his head. "But I want to do something. I want to redeem myself in some way. I don't want my girl to know who I am, but I'd like to win her respect. I can't be what you say she thinks I was, but if I had a chance I might show myself a man again. I wouldn't mind Lize knowing that I am alive. It might be a comfort to her. But I don't want even her to be told till I can go to her in my own duds."

"She's pretty sick," said Cavanagh. "I telephoned Lee Virginia last night, and if you wish you may ride down with me tomorrow and see her."

The old man fell a-tremble. "I daren't do that. I can't bear to tell her where I've been."

"She needn't know. I will tell her you've been out of your mind. I'll say anything you wish. You can go to her in the clothes you have on if you like. She will not recognize you as the prisoner I held the other night. You can have your beard trimmed, and not even the justice will know you."

All reserve had vanished out of the convict's heart, and with choking voice he thanked his young host. "I'll never be a burden to you," he declared in a firmer voice. "And if my lung holds out I'll show you I'm not the total loco that I 'pear to be."

CHAPTER XVI.

CAVANAGH FOLLOWS HIS CHIEF.

AT breakfast next morning Cavanagh said: "I must ride back and take some bread to the dog. I can't go away and leave him there without saying hello."

"Let me do that," suggested Wetherford. "I'm afraid to go down to the Fork. I reckon I'd better go back and tend the sheep till Gregg sends some one up to take my place."

"That might be too late to see Lize. Lee's voice showed great anxiety. She may be on her deathbed. No; you'd better go down with me today," he urged. And at last the old man consented.

Putting some bread in his pockets, Ross rode off up the trail to see how the dog and his flock were faring. He had not gone far when he heard the tinkle of the bells and the murmur of the lambs, and a few moments later the collie came toward him with the air of a boy who, having assumed to disregard the orders of his master, expects a scolding. He plainly said: "I've brought my sheep to you because I was lonesome. Please forgive me."

Cavanagh called to him cheerily and tossed him a piece of bread, which he caught in his teeth, but did not swallow. On the contrary, he held it while leaping for joy of the praise he heard in his new found master's voice.

Turning the flock upward toward the higher peaks, the ranger commanded the collie to their heels and so, having redeemed his promise, rode back to the cabin, where he found Wetherford saddled and ready for his momentous trip to the valley. He had shaved away his gray beard, and had Ross been unprepared for these changes he would have been puzzled to account for this decidedly military figure sitting statuesquely on his pony before the door.

"You can prove an alibi," he called as he drew near. "Gregg himself would never recognize you now."

Wetherford was in no mood for joking. "Lize will. I wore a mustache in the old days, and there's a scar on my chin."

As he rode he confided this strange thing to Cavanagh. "I know," said he, "that Lize is old and wrinkled, for I've seen her, but all the same I can't re-[illegible] any set woman down [illegible]. My Lize is slim and [illegible] whom you know [illegible] complexion and face that's [illegible] exactly what [illegible] means more to [illegible]"

"I think I understand you," said Cavanagh, with sympathy in his voice.

The nearer Wetherford came to the actual meeting with his wife the more he shook. At last he stopped in the road. "I don't believe I can do it," he declared. "I'll be like a ghost to her. What's the use of it? She'll only be worried by my story. I reckon I'd better keep dark to everybody. Let me go back. I'm plum scared cold."

While still he argued two men on horseback rounded a sharp turn in the trail and came face to face with the ranger. Wetherford's face went suddenly gray. "There's the deputy!"

"Keep quiet. I'll do the talking," commanded Cavanagh, who was instant in his determination to shield the man. "Good morning, gentlemen," he called cheerily. "You're abroad early!"

The man in front was the deputy sheriff of the county; his companion was a stranger.

"That was a horrible mess you stumbled on over on Deer creek," the deputy remarked.

"It certainly was. Have any arrests been made?"

"Not yet, but we're on a clew. This is Marshal Haines of Dallas, Mr. Cavanagh," pursued the deputy. The two men nodded in token of the introduction, and the deputy went on. "You remember that old cuss that used to work for Gregg?"

Again Cavanagh nodded.

"Well, that chap is wanted by the Texas authorities. Mr. Haines here wants to see him mighty bad. He's an escaped convict with a bad record."

"Is that so?" exclaimed Cavanagh. "I thought he seemed a bit gun shy."

"The last seen of him was when Sam Gregg sent him up to herd sheep. I think he was mixed up in that killing myself—him and Ballard—and we're going up to get some track of him. Didn't turn up at your station, did he?"

"Yes; he came by some days ago on his way, so he said, to relieve that sick Basque, Ambro. I went up a couple of days ago and found the Basque dead and the old man gone. I buried the herder the best I could, and I'm on my way down to report the case."

The deputy mused. "He may be hanging round some of the lumber camps. I reckon we had better go up and look the ground over anyhow. We might just chance to overhaul him."

"He may have pulled out over the range," suggested the ranger. "Anyhow, it's a long way up there, and you'll probably have to camp at my place tonight. You'll find the key hanging over the door. Go in and make yourself comfortable."

The deputy thanked him and was about to ride on when Cavanagh added: "I burned that Basque's tent and bedding for fear of contagion. His outfit was worthless anyhow. You'll find the sheep just above my cabin and the horse in my corral."

"The old man didn't take the horse, eh? Well, that settles it; he's sure at one of the camps. Much obliged. Good day."

As the two officers rode away Wetherford leaned heavily on his pommel and stared at the ranger with wide eyes. His face was drawn and his lips dry. "They'll get me! They'll get me!" he said.

"Oh, no, they won't," rejoined Cavanagh. "You're all right yet. They suspect nothing. How could they, with you in uniform and in my company?"

"All the same, I'm scared. That man Haines had his eyes on me every minute. He saw right through me. They'll get me, and they'll charge me up with that killing."

"No, they won't, I tell you," insisted the ranger. "Haines suspected nothing. I had his eye. He never saw you before and has nothing but a description to go by, so cheer up. Your uniform and your position with me will make you safe—perfectly safe. They'll find the Basque's camp burned and the sheep in charge of the dog, and they'll fancy that you have skipped across the range. But see here, old man," and he turned on him sharply, "you didn't tell me the whole truth. You said you were out on parole."

"I couldn't tell you the whole truth," replied the fugitive. "But I will now. I was in for a life sentence. I was desperate for the open air and homesick for the mountains, and I struck down one of the guards. I was willing to do anything to get out. I thought if I could get back to this country and my wife and child I'd be safe. I said I'd be willing to go back to the pen if necessary, but I'm not. I can't do it. I'd die there. You must save me for my girl's sake."

His voice and eyes were wild with a kind of desperate fury of fear, and Cavanagh, moved to pity, assured him of his aid. "Now, listen," he said. "I'm going to shield you on account of your work for that poor shepherd and for your daughter's sake. It's my duty to apprehend you, of course, but I'm going to protect you. The safest thing for you to do is to go back to my cabin. Ride slow, so as not to get there till they're gone. They'll ride over to the sawmill without doubt. If they come back this way remember that the deputy saw you only as a ragged old man with a long beard and that Haines has nothing but a printed description to go by. There's no use trying to flee. You are a marked man in that uniform, and you are safer right here with me than anywhere else this side of Chicago. Haines is likely to cross the divide in the belief that you have gone that way, and if he does you have no one but the deputy to deal with."

He succeeded at last in completely rousing the older man's courage.

Wetherford rose to meet his opportunity. "I'll do it," he said firmly.

"That's the talk!" exclaimed Cavanagh to encourage him. "You can throw them off the track this time, and when I come back tomorrow I'll bring some other clothing for you, and then we'll plan some kind of scheme that will get you out of the country. I'll not let them make a scapegoat of you."

OFFICIAL PAPER OF THE CITY

FRIDAY, APRIL 21 1911.

And Colonel Roosevelt is again out tooting his horn.

A man's best friend is the one who stands by him in time of need.

The citizen who thinks more of his rights than he does of his duties, may not be a dangerous character, but he is by no means the best possible citizen.

In the "never" line Marshall Field says, "Never give a note, never buy a share of stock on margin, never borrow, never place a mortgage on your holdings, never speculate and hold all customers to a strict meeting of their obligations." If those whom men call successful, had followed Marshall Field we wonder if they would have been so called or no.

The city papers would like to have it that D. P. O'Neill undertook to exercise his muscle ere his return to his spring farming, the said exercise being directed against the person of another House member while the House was in session. We have it from an eye witness that the said report was a highly colored newspaper version which however, served one good purpose in that D. P. O'Neill and incidentally Thief River Falls, obtained a considerable amount of front page space thanks to "rabid reporters."

The records of the State Legislature show that, tho they may be called the "do nothing" legislature, in their session of ninety days four hundred and eight bills were passed, two hundred by the House and two hundred and eight by the senate others were left on the calendar or general orders. But of important, asked for bills the number is but a small per cent of those and it is because of this lack of needed legislation that th people wonder if the three hundred thousand odd dollars could not have been better invested.

Representative Dan P. O'Neill, of Thief River Falls deserves the thanks of every person in northern Minnesota for his able championship of reapportionment at this session and for the stand he took on the so-called "six senator" bill, which is a proposed amendment to the constitution, limiting represetation in the senate to six from any one county, and is but a blind to delay reapportionment. Mr. O'Neill said:

"The demand for reapportionment did not come from the cities," he said, "it came from the unjustly represented districts of northern Minnesota. This measure, they say, came from the senate. I say it was born in sin, and conceived in iniquity. Republican senators have betrayed their party and betrayed the people, and now they are seeking to justify their selfish stand by this unjust measure. They are trying to throw sand in the eyes of the people. This bill ought to be killed quick, and so place the responsibility where it belongs.

WORK AND SUCCESS

Remember, my son, you have to work. whether you handle a pick or a pen or a wheelbarrow or a set of books, dig ditches or edit a paper, ring an auction bell or write funny things, you must work. If you look around you will see the men who are the most able to live the rest of their days without work are the men who work the hardest. Don't be afraid of killing yourself with overwork. It is beyond your power to do that on the sunny side of thirty. They die sometimes, but it is because they quit work at 6 a. m., and don't go home till 2 a. m. It is the interval that kills, my son. The work gives you an appetite for your meals; it lends solidity to your slumbers; it gives you a perfect and grateful appreciation of a holiday. There are young men who do not work, but the world is not proud of them. It does not know their names even; it simply speaks of them as "old So and So's boys." Nobody likes them; the great busy world doesn't know that they are there. So find out what you want to be and do, and take off your coat and make a dust in the world. The busier you are the less harm you will be apt to get into, the sweeter will be your sleep, the brighter and happier your holidays and the better satisfied the world will be with you. —Bob Burdette.

JACK LONDON'S TALK TO SOLDIERS

The war dogs are angry at Jack London and snap their teeth at him. He may get material for a new novel if they keep it up. He might call it "The Black Fang" and make General E. A. Forbes the villian.

At any rate, Jack London has kept a big lot of men from joining the army and navy by a circular that he has issued.

The army officers are crazy about it and are looking for legal support to put Jack London in jail for his impudence.

Almost every man in Southern California who has read the circular refuses to enlist, and it has caused a big falling off in enlitsment.

It has also caused a great many desertions.

Here is the circular:

"Young Men: The lowest aim in your life is to be a soldier. The good soldier never tries to distinguish right from wrong. He never thinks; never reasons; he only obeys. If he is ordered to fire on his fellow citizens, on his friends, on his neighbors, on his relatives, he obeys without hesitation. If he is ordered to fire down a crowded street when the poor are clamoring for bread, he obeys, and sees the gray hairs of age stained with red and the life gushing from the breasts of women, feeling neither remorse nor sympathy. If he is ordered off as one of a firing squad to execute a hero or benefactor, he fires without hesitation, though he knows the bullet will pierce the noblest heart that ever beat in human breasts.

A good soldier is a blind, heartless, soulless, murderous machine. He is not a man. He is not even a brute, for brutes only kill in selfdefense. All that is human in him, all that is divine, all that constitutes the man, has been sworn away when he took the enlistment roll. His mind, his conscience, aye, his very soul, are in the keeping of his officer.

"No man can fall lower than a soldier—it is a depth beneath which we cannot go.

Keep the boys out of the army. It is hell.

Every Socialist local should make it a point to advise thoughtless fellows, who may mean well, and tell them of the awful rottenness of the whole army system.

Down with the army and the navy. We don't need killing institutions. We need life giving institutions.

State Loses in Rate Cases.

In an exhaustive opinion handed down in St. Paul last week, Judge Sanborn, senior United States circuit judge of the eighth judicial district, decided ther Minnesota rate cases against the state railway commission. Judge Sanborn, in his ruling, holds:

First—That the laws of the state legislature reducing passenger rates 33 1-3 per cent and reducing commodity rates 7.3 per cent are discriminatory and in violation of the constitution of the United States.

Second—That the railroad and warehouse commission order reducing general merchandise rates within the staes is discriminatory and in violation of the constitution of the United States.

Third—That a state may regulate interstate commerce insofar as it does not burden interstate commerce and no further.

Fourth—That the nation only thru the national congress can regulate interstate commerce rates.

Fifth—All state laws that regulate rates, which laws affect or burden or regulate interstate commerce, are unconstitutional and void.

Sixth—The unavoidable effect of the sweeping laws of Minnesota reducing and regulating rates is indirectly to discriminate against interstate commerce and is in direct violation of the commerce clause of the constitution.

Criminal Minds Are Leaky.

It is written in the fundamental philosophy of detective science that the criminal type of mind cannot keep a secret.

The most careful criminal is fated to leave some trace of his crime by which it may be brought home to him by detective science. The most reticent criminal is under continual internal pressure to unburden his mind by which soon or late crimes hidden from all others are brought to light by his own act.

Students of design in human society and the life of the world, whether the design be the emanation of a personal will or the evolution of natural forces, will find in this fact something like the gradual decay and extinction of beings who live in defiance of physical or moral law.

Crimes against the public are peculiarly susceptible of this leakage through the minds of their perpetrators; perhaps because they are less restrained by fear of punishment. When the courts of any state really set about the punishment of crimes against the public, they are embarrassed with the richness of evidence. Boastful confessions of bribe giving grow on every tree of gossip in city clubs and bragging admission of bribe taking may be picked up in every village street.

The truth in the Lorimer case first reached the light through the gabble of sold legislators and now these are confirmed by the careless boasts of the men who bought them. Here we see a wise provision of nature in energetic action.—Minneapolis Tribune.

Are You A Tire-Murderer?

"Let me warn the inexperienced reader against running on flat tires," writes Lloyd Osbourne in "Hints to the Motor Tourist" in Sunset Magazine for May. "No matter where a puncture overtakes you, move not an inch until you have installed a new tube or lock on your Stepney. Don't be tempted by a shady nook a hundred feet beyond. A hundred feet can cut your inner tube to ribbons, and injure your casing beyond repair. Let the sun beat down on your defenseless head, let the ground burn your unfortunate feet, let the spot be the worst you could have chosen in the whole state of California—but stay where you are. If you don't you are a tire-murderer and unworthy to own a car. Never mind your wife's pleadings, but hustle out the jack and get busy [illegible]

The Robber

By RUTH GRAHAM

Copyright by American Press Association, 1911.

David Venables many years ago, when Missouri was a wilder country than it is now, riding on one of the dirt roads and coming to a bit of higher ground where the road turned, heard in the bushes on the rise a voice which seemed to be that of a boy.

"Halt, thar!"

Venables drew rein. He was armed, but, feeling sure that he was covered by an unseen enemy, thought it dangerous to attempt to draw a weapon.

"Well, what do you want?" he asked.

"Put yer valybles in the road."

Venables, though disliking to be robbed by one whose voice indicated that he was little more than a child, yet dreading a bullet in his brain, complied. Taking his watch from his fob and some silver money from his pocket, he tossed both to the ground.

"Is that all yo' got?" asked the voice.

"Yes."

"Well, go on."

Venables rode on and when he reached a tavern a few miles distant reported that he had been robbed by a boy who could not have been more than fourteen years old, for his voice had not changed.

Within a week Edward Ormsbee, when riding on the same road on which this robbery had been committed, saw walking ahead of him a youth who might have been between sixteen and nineteen years of age. He was dressed in the costume of the country, buckskin, and had a pistol at one hip and a knife at the other. Ormsbee, when he reached him, called to him and asked where he was going. Learning that the traveler had some distance to go, Ormsbee invited him to get up on his horse behind him and he would give him a lift on his way. The youth accepted, put his foot on Ormsbee's, gave him his hand and was pulled up on to the horse's back.

In a few minutes Ormsbee felt cold iron against his head, and the boy behind him told him that he was about to go through his pockets and if he moved he would be shot. Ormsbee was not only paralyzed by surprise, but unable to defend himself in his position. He made no resistance, and the boy took his wallet from his pocket, containing $10 in bills, the state bank currency of the period. Then, they being in a wood, the young robber slid off the horse's rump and disappeared among the trees.

The next robbery was committed on a peddler, who said that the robber was a bearded man with a squeaky voice. Then followed another robbery by a man with a strip of cloth over his face, with holes cut for his eyes and nose. All agreed that the voice of the person who had robbed them was either not that of a grown man or else it was pitched in a very unusual key.

However, it was decided that the youngster had been permitted to commit his depredations long enough, and a posse was organized to hunt him down. So one morning three men—the number was considered quite sufficient—were armed and started out for the purpose. Just outside the settlement they stopped at the house of old Hedges and his wife, a couple whose poverty had been notorious, but who now seemed to be getting along very well.

"Had a windfall, Mr. Hedges?" asked one of the party.

"No; our Sallie's clerkin' for a man over in Hudson county, and she's keepin' us up."

When the party left it was arranged that they should proceed separately, but keep in touch. They hunted all the morning and part of the afternoon, when two of them heard a couple of shots and hurried in the direction of the sound. They found Jim Turner wounded in the hand. A masked man had held him up; but, being ready for the robber, Jim had fired at him. The robber had returned the shot and run.

All started in the direction the masked man had taken, moving several hundred yards apart. It was not long before they heard some one breaking through the bushes, ascending a hillside in the bed of a dry creek. They followed, but were soon stopped by a bullet singing over their heads. One of them, Hank Burke, a young hunter used to Indian fighting, crawled forward and reported that there was a little fort made of stones about four feet broad and as many high, with a loophole. They couldn't take the position without a likelihood of some of them being killed. It was decided that Hank should go forward for a parley. He did so, taking a position behind a tree.

"Say, you, thar, there's three of us here, all armed. You'd better surrender."

Burke listened for a reply, but none came. Presently he heard a sob.

Leaving his tree, he went forward. Neither shot nor word greeted him. When he reached the miniature fort there behind it sat the robber. He was not masked, but his hands covered his face. Seizing the wrists, Hank exposed the face.

"For heaven's sake, Sallie Hedges, what does this mean?"

"We was all starvin', and I took to the road. Please don't tell paw and maw."

The party returned, stating that their search had been a failure. But there were no more robberies. In a few weeks Hank Burke married the robber and provided for the old couple until they died.

The Seal Ring.

The seal ring is known to be the oldest style of ring. It dates back to the days of the Old Testament, and products of the glyptic art, as gem engraving was called, were known in the most remote times. In Exodus xxviii, 17-20, mention is made of the following stones, upon which the names of the twelve children of Israel were engraved: The sardius, the topaz, the carbuncle, the emerald, the sapphire, the diamond, the ligure, the agate, the amethyst, beryl, onyx and jasper. In verse 2 of the same chapter we find mention of the engraving of signets upon the hardest stones. It is believed that the Egyptians instructed the Israelites in the art of stone engraving. The Egyptians used the lapidary's wheel and emery powder and knew the use of the diamond in engraving other hard stones. Among the Assyrian and Babylonian ruins were found fine specimens of signets on gems, many of them set in rings.

A Double Risk.

It was well known in Mayville that when Cyrus Fanning lent anything, from a hammer to a plow, he expected a good return for the favor. It was a matter of astonishment to Wilson Green, however, when on inquiring of Mr. Fanning how much it would cost to rent his long ladder for an afternoon Cyrus replied promptly, "One dollar fifty."

"Now, look here, Cy," remonstrated his neighbor; "you know I've got to borrow it, for mine isn't long enough to reach where I'm obliged to climb to search out that chimney leak for the Widow Sears. Can't you make it less?"

"No, I can't," and Mr. Fanning shook his small head and closed his obstinate mouth.

"Why can't you?" demanded Wilson Green.

"Because there's a weak place in it two-thirds the way up," snapped Mr. Fanning. "It'll bear my weight all right, but you're a good thutty pounds heavier. If it gave way under you 'twould cost me a dollar to get it mended. Considering the resk, I call a dollar 'n' a half cheap."—Youth's Companion.

that statement.

The Sanborn decision led to a revival of the Cashman distance tariff bill. This measure, introduced in the lower branch by Mr. Crane, was recalled from the committee on Railroads where it had been buried during out embalment or obsequies, during the whole session and pushed thru the House. The Speaker made a spectacular plea for its enactment, but it came too late. If his interest had been exerted two months earlier to get it out of the packed railroad committee it might have counted. As it was, the eleventh hour rally was a waste of head lines because the Senate promptly adjourned from Thursday until Monday and with only two more working days the enemies of the distance tariff in the upper branch were able to delay it to its second death.

The vote by which the distance tariff bill passed the House was as follows:

wood bill is to soothe the feelings of the Northwestern farmers, who see in the Canadian Reciprocity Bill a possible menace to their interests. Whether it will have the desired effect remains to be seen. From all reports Northwestern farmers are just as determined as ever in their opposition to the proposed Canadian trade agreement.

Senator Clapp spoke on popular government issues before the State assembly of Pennsylvania last week. The farmers' grange in that State is behind a bill providing for the initiative and referendum and the Minnesota Senator adressed the legislature at the request of this organization. On Friday evening he spoke at Lancaster, Penn.

Just what effect the Sanborn rate decision will have on federal legislation affecting railroad regulation remains to be seen. It is conceded here among law-makers that the decision if upheld by the supreme court will be far-reaching in importance. For one thing it is probable that it will call attention to the necessity for further federal rate legislation. If the State is to be restricted in the scope of its railway legislation, the opinion prevails that Congress will be obliged to grant additional powers to the interstate commerce commission.

Rumors are going in our city that some of the ladies of Thief River Falls have organzed a (daughters of Norway) lodge lately, but I'll bet a penny to a cent if they come out here and join the Rebbecca lodge they would have more fun in 15 minutes than a whole week at their own lodge.

Some of the members of the Rebbecca lodge entertained Mrs. Finhart in regard to joinging the lodge, She is a good church member and would not promise to join the lodge unti lshe had consulted her congregation in regard to secret lodges.

A fine young lady was seen at the corner of Main Street, Happy Ave., in the city of Anstad carrying a worn out umbrella and a chimney-less lantern. She was looking for a place to stay over night, but was very unlucky because all the Anstad puppies got after her.

"THE SOCIAL CENTER."

The need of a place, in every farming community, which shall serve as a center for social gatherings and activities of all sorts—where people may learn both to work and to play together, and acquire the beneficent powers which develop from unity and co-operation—has received more general recognition that ever since it was so strongly emphasized in the report of the Roosevelt County Life Commission.

What that "place" should be has been a matter of much discussion. Some would locate it in the village church; some in the district school building. From the neighborhood of Spokane comes the suggestion of a specially-built "Country Life Hall," and in Connecticut the example of the little country town of Westagne, in converting a old colonial residence into a "Neighborhood House" is held up as the thing for general imitation.

But to not a few the "Consolidated School" idea affords the best solution for this, along with many other problems. When the church is proposed, the question must too often be asked, "Which church?" Denominational jealousies may be quickened, from the fact that the preference of one church ovr another may influence attendance and growth. Also for many social gayeties, the church is held by many to be not the proper place. The district school building is likely to be too small; its adaptaton to various social functions difficult, and its use too much limited by the necessity of avoiding any interrupton of the work of the school. The separate "Country Life Hall" involves a large expenditure for a special purpose, when the same outlay might be made to serve several purposes at onse. As for the "Neighborhood House," it is a splendid idea; but "colonial houses" of large dimensions with halls capable, like that at Westogue, of setting 200 persons, are somewhat rare in the West—as rare, perhaps, as the individuals willing to donate such a house to the use of the community.

When three or four, or more, school districts unite in the erection of a Consolidated School buildng, it is a comparatively easy matter to contrive that the assembly hall therein shall be so planned and arranged as to be perfectly adapted to the holding of meetings of farmers' clubs, boys' and girls' contest, lecture courses, dances and social functions of all sorts. The location of such a school will naturally be chosen with a view to its easy accessibility from the largest number of farm homes in the naturally be grouped many of the cooperative enterprises in which the farmers are interested. Everything, in fact, would seem to point to the consolidated school as the coming "social center" of the larger number of communities.

By pushing for the concolidation of district schools, therefore, everyone will do something to promote, also, the development of the "social center" idea—an idea big with beneficent possibilities for those who dwell in country homes.—C. R. Barns, University Farm.

PATTEN IN NEW CAMPAIGN
Chicago Speculator Will Devote Millions to Fight Tuberculosis.

Chicago, April 18.—Exercising the business sagacity and energy that made him famous as a speculator in grain and cotton and enabled him to accumulate in a few years a fortune estimated at $20,000,000, James A Patten, of Chicago and Evanston, has begun a personal campaign of "social service," the keyngte of which is sounded in the donation of an additional $2,000,000 to the Northwestern university to be used in a war on tuberculosis.

For months Mr. Patten has been shaping his affairs, according to his friends, so that he would be in a positon to take personal charge of the fight to stamp out the "white plauge." Now he will not only provide the money for scientific research, it is declared but will act as general manager of the practical campaign of eradication.

Mr. Patten's determination to gain the ultimate victory over tuberculosis was evinced after the death last year of his brother, Georeg W. Patten, who succumbed to the disease after many years of suffering. With millions at his command and freedom from all business cares, he is in a position to devote his life to the task.

INDIANA SALOONKEEPERS MUST QUIT BUSINESS.

GARY, Ind., April 18.—Twenty-seven saloonkeepers of this city and four of Hammond will have to quit the liquor business as the result of the action of Judge A. B. Anderson of the United States district court today in refusing to grant naturalization papers to them on the ground that they were undesirable citizens.

Evidence was produced in court to show that the men had disobeyed the law by selling liquor on Sunday. A new saloon regulation law, passed at the recent session of the Indian legislature, providing that liquor licenses shall not be granted to or renewed for un-naturalized citizens.—Duluth News Tribune.

A Clever Crow.

As to a crow's ability to talk, said a naturalist, some will and others will never learn. The first of the four birds I have had recently was a wonderful talker. Unlike the parrot, his conversation seemed intelligent rather than simply imitative. For instance, if I said to him, "Hello, Jack?" he would answer, "Hello!" and not put on the "Jack," as so many parrots do when one says, "Hello, Polly!"

But he could imitate me also. He found that when any one called and said, "Hello, Wood!" my reply was a low "Hello!" He tried in every way to imitate that low tone of mine and finally succeeded. He would go over to his water trough and with his head in the air would cry, "Hello, Wood!" Then down would go his head in the trough, and out would come the "Hello!" just like mine.—Washington Star.

Temperature of Sea Water.

The temperature of ocean water varies at the surface from 28 degrees F. at the poles to over 80 degrees F. in the tropics. The cold water toward the poles has an annual variation of less than 10 degrees F. at any one spot, and the warm water of the tropics also has an annual variation of less than 10 degrees F. in a band that nearly encircles the earth. This is the region of the coral reefs and atolls. Between these regions of small annual variation there are two bands surrounding the earth where the annual variation is greater and may exceed in certain regions 40 degrees F. at any one spot.—Marine Journal.

The Woman In the Case.

A mother-in-law had stayed so often with her daughter as to cause a quarrel with the husband.

One day she found her daughter weeping in the drawing room.

"What's the matter? Gracious me, don't say that George has left you!" she exclaimed.

"He has," replied the young wife tearfully.

"Then there's a woman in the case?" mater asked, her eyes lighting up expectantly.

"Yes."

"Who is it?"

"Yes!"

China's Floating Islands.

On all the great lakes of China are found floating islands, which are enormous rafts of bamboo overlaid with earth and bearing on the surface of the water pretty houses and gardens. They are, in fact, aquatic farms, bearing crops of rice and vegetables. The rich bottom mud, utilized as an artificial soil, is extremely fertile and yields bountiful harvests, though on a small scale. In a country where there is a lack of available land the floating plantations are most serviceable, large sails being attached to the dwelling house as well as to each corner of the island whenever it is desired to move about. After gathering a crop of grain or garden produce from his farm the floating farmer casts his nets into the water and from their depths brings up a supply of fish for his family.

Cheeky John Forster.

In "William Harrison Ainsworth and His Friends" the author, S. M. Ellis, tells a quaint story of Ainsworth and his friend John Forster. Ainsworth had discovered a fine set of Hogarth's engravings which was held at £5, a sum which, he said, "I could not just then spare or at least did not think I ought to spare. I took John Forster down to see the Hogarths, whereupon he actually said that he would and must have them himself and as he had not £5 of loose money at that moment I should lend that sum to him. I pointed out the absurdity of the position—that I wanted the engravings for myself and could not afford to lay out the money; how, then, could I lend it—to him? It was of no use. He overruled me, had the £5 of me and bought the Hogarths I was longing for."

The Moves In Chess.

In the number of possible moves chess stands alone among games, and not only is it perfectly safe to say that no living man has ever made even once every possible move, but it is highly improbable that in all the centuries of the history of the game has every possible move been made. The different ways of playing the first four moves on each side are so numerous that if every man, woman and child in a city of half a million population were to set to work playing them at the rate of four moves a minute night and day it would be more than a year before any one would be able to leave the chessboard.

A Freak Tortoise.

"Patrick, Patrick!" admonished a lady. "Be careful where you are walking: You nearly trod upon my darling tortoise!"

"Och, be aisy, me lady!" rejoined her Irish gardener. "Shure an' I wouldn't hurt a hair of his head, the sweet cratur!"—London Telegraph.

Thackeray's Disfigured Nose.

The usual account of how Thackeray was disfigured says that Venables broke the novelist's nose in a fair fight. John Ward in Notes and Queries supplies another version. About a year after Thackeray's death Mr. Ward was traveling on one of the main railways and had as companions two old ladies who knew Thackeray well. One of them said the novelist had told them this story:

"Being one of the youngest pupils (at Charterhouse), he was chosen by one of the older lads, a rather proud aristocrat in his way, to act as his fag. Thackeray bore it as well as he could, but demurred to some more arbitrary command than usual and flatly refused to obey, whereupon the young 'aristocrat' caught Thackeray up, held his head under his arm and with the heel of his boot used as a hammer beat the beautiful aquiline nose quite flat with his face—in fact, breaking and injuring its structure completely—the excuse being, 'You'll clean my boots next time, sir.'"

Won His Supper.

Terry is of that class of gentry whose nimble wit is the only thing which keeps them from starving in this day of practicalities. Terry is a great coffee drinker, and many are the expedients he will undertake to get it when he is without funds. The other evening he walked into a cafe and said to the proprietor:

"Good evening, Mr. M."

"How are you, Terry?" was the response.

"Pretty good, pretty good, barrin' a bad t'roat. It's glad I am to see yerself lookin' so smart and yer doin' so well in yer business, now, ain't yer? It's glad I am, too, about that. By the way, Mr. M., would yer be afther trustin' me this evenin'?"

"Trust you! Terry, I wouldn't be trustin' my own father."

"Thrue for you, Mr. M. If I'd knowed yer father as well as you perhaps I wouldn't trust him meself!"

And Terry got his coffee and rolls.—Chicago News.

When Nature Was Timekeeper.

In the British museum is a large stone composed of carbonate of lime which would serve perfectly as a day laborer's calendar inasmuch as it would indicate to him every Sunday and holiday of the year, though not the day of the month. Moreover, the stone is an actual time record of the work done for a long period in an English coal mine.

The "Sunday stone," as it is called, was removed from a colliery drain. When the miners were at work the water running through the drain left a deposit colored black by the coal dust, but when no work was being done the water ran down clear and left a white deposit. These deposits in the course of time built up the stone. Each day of work left a black streak, immediately followed by a white streak made during the night. Wide white streaks indicate the holidays and Sundays.—Harper's Weekly.

Eskimo Trial Marriage.

The trial marriage is an ineradicable custom among the Eskimos. If a young man and woman are not suited with each other they try again, and sometimes several times, but when they find mates to whom they are adapted the arrangement is generally permanent. If two men want to marry the same woman they settle the question by a trial of strength, and the better man has his way.—"The North Pole," by Robert E. Peary.

Helping Dad.

Small Johnny—Papa, would you be glad if I saved a dollar for you? Papa—Certainly, my son. Small Johnny—Well, I saved it for you, all right. You said if I brought a first class report from my teacher this week you would give me a dollar, and I didn't bring it.—Chicago News.

TWENTY-FIVE DIE IN TORNADOES

Immense Damage Is Done In the Southwest.

FOUR STATES ARE COVERED

Storms Sweep Over Portions of Missouri Oklahoma, Kansas and Arkansas.

Kansas City, April 14.—Tornadoes which swept parts of Missouri, Oklahoma, Kansas and Arkansas are known to have killed twenty-five persons, injured more than 100, made more than 500 homeless, and to have done thousands of dollars' worth of damage to property.

According to dispatches there were several storms. The first tornado was reported at Eskridge, Kan., twenty-five miles south of Topeka. Here many houses were destroyed and much damage done to crops.

The storm which swept Eskridge struck Powhatan and Netawaka, Kan., nearby towns, then swept off to the northwest, striking Whiting, Kan., north of Topeka, where sixty houses were demolished. Continuing to the northwest Hiawatha and Manville, Kan., were struck, and here three persons were killed and much property damage done.

Later a tornado struck Lawrence, Kan., killing two persons, injuring twelve, and doing damage estimated at $175,000. This storm swept the town from the southwest to the northeast and after passing over the Kansas river continued toward Leavenworth.

Tornado Hits Oklahoma.

An hour after the first tornado struck Eskridge a tornado swept through Oklahoma, parts of Arkansas and Southwest Missouri. Big Heart, Okla., having a population of about 1,000 persons, was the first town struck. Here the storm came suddenly, tearing down houses above the heads of the people. Many rushed into the streets, only to be knocked down by flying debris and others to their death. It was an hour after the storm before the first word of it reached Pawhuska. A relief train was sent to the scene immediately.

MISSOURI STORM KILLS NINE

Scores of Others Sustain Injuries in Tornado.

St. Louis, April 15.—Three are dead in this city and property valued at between $1,500,000 and $2,000,000 was destroyed by the most destructive storm that has visited St. Louis since the memorable tornado of May, 1896.

There was a remarkable precipitation of hailstones. Some of these are reported as being three inches in diameter. Hail caused the greatest damage.

At Valles Mines, Mo., the tornado killed four persons and seriously injured a score more.

At Cadet, Mo., two women were killed and fifteen persons injured.

At Shelbyville, Ill., hailstones eight inches in circumference were reported, while at Anna, Ill., growing crops were severely damaged by the hail and wind.

AMBASSADOR HILL RESIGNS

American Representative to Germany Will Retire.

Washington, April 15.—David Jayne Hill of Rochester, N. Y., ambassador of the United States to Germany, has resigned his post. The resignation has been accepted by President Taft.

Neither in Mr. Hill's letter of resignation nor in the president's letter of acceptance is any reason given for the ambassador's action. The president thanks Mr. Hill for his services at Berlin and says that he is glad to know that he will remain there until July 1, when the resignation goes into effect.

DENMAN THOMPSON IS DEAD

Well Known Actor Passes Away at Advanced Age.

West Swansey, N. H., April 15.—Denman Thompson, the aged actor and creator of the part of Joshua Whitcomb in "The Old Homestead," died at his home here after a long illness, aged seventy-seven.

German Ambassador Resigns.

Berlin, April 15.—The resignation of Count J. P. von Bernstorff as ambassador to the United States has been announced. Ill health was given as the cause. He will be succeeded by Count von Stumm, now on the staff of the German foreign office.

Manhattan Scallop.

A delicious breakfast or luncheon dish is Manhattan scallop. Shred sufficient cold cooked fish to measure a good half pint. It must be free from skin and bone. Add to it one cupful of fine stale breadcrumbs, a good seasoning of salt and pepper, two well beaten eggs mixed with a half cupful of stewed tomatoes. Turn all into a buttered dish; sprinkle the top with buttered breadcrumbs, dot with bits of butter and brown in a hot oven.—Suburbanite.

REBELS REPULSE FEDERAL ATTACK

Severe Engagement Takes Place on Mexican Border.

TRY TO RETAKE AGUA PRIETA

Rain of Bullets Falls In Douglas, Ariz., and a Number of Americans Are Wounded.

Agua Prieta, Mex., April 13.—The most important battle of the Mexican revolution was fought here between 1,600 federals under command of Lieutenant Colonel Diaz and 1,000 rebels under Balasario Garcia and resulted in the repulse of the former.

The battle, however, was not finally decisive. It lasted from 6:30 a. m. until sundown. At nightfall two federal machine guns were in possession of the rebels and the federals had sustained a loss estimated by the rebels as at least 200 killed and wounded. The rebels gave their own loss at twenty.

From the beginning of the battle, regardless of the warning given by the United States government to the leaders of both forces, a rain of bullets poured into the American town of Douglas, and when the day was over, it was found that seven noncombatant residents of that city had been wounded. It was a day almost of terror in Douglas.

Dawn revealed the federal forces formed in fan shaped battle line, in the level country about a mile distant from Agua Prieta, with their machine guns in the center. They gave notice to the enemy of their approach with a hail of bullets from the machine guns, supported by rifle fire, their evident intention being to gain the international line with its adobe guard houses and from this vantage ground turn their fire upon the rebels.

Federal Fire Very Severe.

The insurrectos directed their fire at the crews manning the machine guns. But the fire of the federals was so fierce that it forced the rebels back to their second line of intrenchments.

The federals advanced slowly. As they came nearer the fire of the rebels became more effective. Leaving the protection of their breastworks they moved out into the open, continuing to concentrate their fire upon the machine guns. [illegible] in the fighting.

At 11 o'clock the republican federals had reformed and again advanced to gain the boundary line, masking their movement with heavy rifle fire. The machine guns were silent. The rebels, encouraged by their early success, returned the fire eagerly. The interval had been employed by the rebels in erecting new entrenchments.

The advance guard of the federals in this attack consisted of fifty cavalrymen and 300 infantry. Behind them was a supporting party that kept under cover of trees and bushes.

Endless Stream of Bullets.

The federals reserved their fire, but an unceasing stream of bullets poured from the trenches. These, striking the dry earth, made it appear as though a dust storm were raging and for a time served to obscure a view of the conflict.

Advancing federals again found the strength and determination of the insurrectos too great for them. They fell back, but in good order, firing as they retired, and left the field and their two machine guns in the possession of the enemy.

More than half of Douglas was under fire from the beginning until the end of the battle. The United States custom house was in the direct range of the attack and the United States soldiers near there were forced to seek shelter.

When the battle began Colonel William A. Shunk, commanding the United States troops, rushed his four troops of cavalry to the line and took every possible precaution for the safety of the citizens of Douglas, keeping them out of that portion of the city which was considered to be most exposed. This, however, did not avail to save Americans from injury.

QUICK ACTION IN THE HOUSE

Resolution for Direct Election of Senators Approved.

Washington, April 15.—The house of representatives, by a vote of 296 to 16, passed the Rucker resolution proposing a constitutional amendment for the direct election of United States senators.

This is the first of the Democratic program measures passed by the house. Backed by a solid Democratic phalanx it went through without modification and with a speed that brought protests from the Republicans.

Former Speaker Cannon and Minority Leader Mann were among those who voted against the resolution.

Sizes of the Planets.

An ingenious way of comparing the sizes of planets with the sun is suggested by a French scientific writer. Let the earth, he says, be represented by a twenty franc piece; then Venus is 15 francs; Mars, 2; Mercury, 7; Uranus, 280; Neptune, 320; Saturn, 1,840; Jupiter, 6,800, and the sun 8,790,000.

One loses all the time which he might employ to better purpose.—Rousseau.

JAMES WHITCOMB RILEY.

Hoosier Poet, Who Has Lost Use of His Hands.

RILEY IS UNABLE TO WRITE

Hoosier Poet Loses Use of Hands and Has to Dictate.

Indianapolis, Ind., April 16.—James Whitcomb Riley, the noted Hoosier poet, has lost complete use of his hands and cannot walk without support. It is feared the lingering illness which has kept Mr. Riley in his bed for the greater part of the last few months will cause his death before many weeks. Practically no one except the immediate members of the family has been permitted to see Mr. Riley for a fortnight.

Though unable to write and forced to dictate his poems, Mr. Riley is making determined efforts to complete his last edition of works that they may be published this spring. The edition will include several new poems.

AMERICAN SOLDIERS MAY CROSS BORDER

Washington, April 18.—President Taft replied to a message from Governor Richard E. Sloan of Arizona, asking protection for citizens of Douglas from the fire of federals and insurrectos, that he was loath to endanger Americans in Mexico by taking so radical a step as sending American troops across the border to prevent further fighting.

The president, in his telegram to the governor, stated that the situation might justify him in ordering troops to cross the border and attempt to stop the fighting or to open fire upon both contestants from the American side.

Mr. Taft hesitated to take such a step, however, because of the possibility of resistance and greater bloodshed and the danger of having his motives misconstrued and misrepresented and arousing Mexicans against many thousands of Americans now in Mexico and jeopardizing their lives and property.

In view of the conditions, therefore, the president felt that he could not order the troops at Douglas to cross the border but he again emphasized the advisability of the people of Douglas avoiding exposing themselves to flying bullets.

LONG IOWA DEADLOCK ENDED

Judge William S. Kenyon Chosen United States Senator.

Des Moines, April 13.—Judge William S. Kenyon was elected United States senator to succeed the late Senator Jonathan P. Dolliver on the sixty-seventh ballot in the Iowa legislature.

Judge Kenyon received 78 votes, just sufficient to elect, against 26 for Judge Deemer, his Republican opponent, and 54 for Porter, Dem.

The new senator is a progressive Republican.

A Time For Blindness.

There is sometimes a greater charity in seeming not to see our neighbor's trouble than in trying to relieve it. "Let me alone!" is the prayer of many a tortured heart when the curious, the officious and the tactless force the door of its place of desolation, albeit they bring wine and oil.

Questions and Answers.

The time elapsing between a question and an answer is almost as important as the answer itself. It may be wisely long or short, but the longer it is the wiser must be the answer.

Scotch Students.

Many a man who never had any "schooling" gets an education, and often a surprisingly good one.

A traveler in Scotland once met a farmer whose ground rent was about $20 a year and who wrote poetry in Gaelic that was of a high order.

This same traveler met a youth in Scotland who rode from home on horseback to the seaport and then across Scotland to Aberdeen, where he sold his horse to enter the university.

It is related of another Scotchman that he was overheard repeating a line of Tennyson, whereupon some one asked him what poet he liked best.

"Homer," he replied.

"Whose translation do you read?"

"I rarely read a translation," he said, wiping the fish scales from his apron. "I like best to read Homer in the original Greek."—Minneapolis Tribune.

All About a Cruiser.

"What sort of a boat is this?" inquired the inquisitive man at the docks.

"A cruiser," replied a smart lad.

"And where is she going?"

"A cruise, sir."

"What makes it go?"

"It's screw, sir."

"Who are on board?"

"It's crew, sir."

"It looks pretty smart."

"We have to keep it clean, or rubbish and dust would accrue, sir."

"Oh, you're too smart! Where do you come from?"

"From Crewe, sir."—London Tit-Bits.

FURTHER IDEAS REGARDING CANADIAN RECIPROCITY

The following letter copied from the Lankin Reporter, published by Sam S. Haislet, formerly of this place we give in full, because we believe it represents the universal sentiment among the farmers of this section: ed

Edmore, N. D., April 10, 1911.

To the Lankin Reporter:—

Just a few more thoughts on Canadian reciprocity, and how I believe it will effect our grain market. By tearing down the tariff wall between this country and Canada, that is, on farm products, we open up our markets for the Canadian farmer,—market centers like Duluth, Minneapolis, Chicago, New York and Buffalo-and what market cities do we get in return where we can sell any of our products? They have no cities there of a million or more inhabitants. We will therefore be compelled to share our home markets with our farmer friends across the line, and no doubt it will stimulate the grain raising in Canada, their millions of acres of fertile land will soon be turned by gas tractors and they will soon raise all the wheat this continent needs (we raise most of it now at a good price) and if we shall also continue to raise wheat it will come to this, that our home markets will be overloaded and then we must turn the Liverpool market.

Now if Argentine and Siberia, as I fear, begin to work more of their untilled land, we will witness a lowering of the price on the Liverpool market, too. But now if the difference in the present price in Canada and here is not caused by the tariff, but by the fact that the Canadian farmer is held up by the elevators and transport companies, they of course by this reciprocity agreement would get the whole difference—or does Jim Hill and other railroad magnates figure on getting part of that tariff? But be this as it may, if our government by passing tariff laws is trying to help the Canadian farmer and the American railroad magnates, and will not stop to consider what effect this will have on the American farmer, then of course we must come to the conclusion that the Republican party is not sincere. We must admit, although we are Republicans, that protective tariff was not meant for us.

Let the Canadian farmer by our tariff legislation get a ten or fifteen cent raise per bushel on wheat and other grains—I don't care how he gets it, whether it is better treatment by their elevators, better markets, cheaper transportation or no twenty-five cent duty for selling on this side of the line, the vital part is that he gets it and gets it, and gets it now because our tariff law changes to a free trade law. And then what will happen? They will support this country with wheat, and we will have to take at least a fifty years' vacation, because we cannot stay in the race and pay tribute in form of protective tariff for our manufactured articles. It took us fifty years under the protective tariff system to build Minneapolis, the greatest wheat market in the world today, and thereby we, to a certain extent, created a home market for our home products.

Would it have been possible to build the city of Minneapolis without the aid of the farmers of Minnesota, North and South Dakota? We helped to build Minneapolis and all other big business centers in this country—did it all under the protective system for them, and free trade for us—we have had to compete with pauper labor of other countries. We came to North Dakota, many of us very poor, and we have by hard labor and strict economy managed to build permanent homes here, thereby changing the desolate plain to a civilized country. This we managed to do in spite of the fact that all odds were against us. We never obtained favors from our government, never asked for them—but we now demand our just rights. We worked from sunrise until sunset—no one thought of a ten hour day in the pioneer period of North Dakota. Young and old, big and small, all worked, and worked hard; saved, economized—I shall not go into detail on that part—but feel a tear trickle in my eye in reviewing those early days; but we stayed, fought the battles and won.

We upheld the Republican party and the protective tariff, looking into the future for our reward, and that future has now arrived, or is on the eve of coming, and lo! we behold a Republican administration trying to make this country half protected and half free. In the past they always told us that they would like to protect our produce, but they could not because we raised too much. Now they cannot let us have the little protection we did at last get, because—because what? Because the cost of living is too high and we are to blame for it. We are asked to share the markets that it took so many years of hard work to build, with our Canadian cousins because the laborer in the large cities thereby will be able to save 50c on his flour bill per annum.

We have been buncoed, blind folded, fooled and betrayed. We have supported protective tariff, protected those infant manufacturing industries until they have grown out of their teens. They have now become so powerful that they can dictate the political policies of this nation, and furthermore they can now control the price of their goods, tariff or no tariff I am inclined to believe that we could not, if we had the power to legislate, envent tariff laws that would place the big interests of this country in competition with the outside world. We have dreamed away the opportune time to stop their grafts. We stood silently by and let them gobble up our mines, forests and a large part of the public domain. And now they are reaching their hungry hand of grab into Alaska and Mexico and our government is dictated to and forced to send soldiers to protect privileged interests in their looting of foreign lands. The American $ is valued higher than the American citizen.

Hoping that the editor and the readers will not get too tired of my writings, I beg to remain,

Respectfully yours,
Peder L. Hjelmstad.

RIOTERS ATTACK MORMONS

Two Injured and Five Arrested in Demonstration.

Birkenhead, Eng., April 18.—The anti-Mormon campaign led to serious disorders here. An organized demonstration against Mormonism was carried out and an ultimatum was issued requiring the Mormon missionaries to quit the town within eight days. Later a crowd attacked the Mormon meeting house and stoned and smashed the windows. The police had great difficulty in restoring order. Two persons were injured and five were arrested.

DEPARTMENT WILL STAND BY POLICY

Mail Clerks Must Not Affiliate With Labor Federation.

Washington, April 18.—Unless Postmaster General Hitchcock is induced to change his mind on the subject he will not rescind the order issued last week transferring Carl C. Van Dyke, the railway mail clerk who was transferred because of his activity in planning an affiliation of the newly formed secret organization of mail clerks with the American Federation of Labor.

Protests against the removal of Van Dyke are coming to Northwestern members, particularly those from Minnesota, in large numbers. Representatives Stevens, Miller and Anderson of Minnesota have received telegrams from the mail clerks in Minnesota protesting against the removal of Van Dyke and urging them to take steps in his behalf.

Representative Anderson took up the case with officials of the postoffice department. He got little satisfaction and left the department with the impression that the postmaster general intends to "stand pat" on the Van Dyke case.

Postal officials make no secret of their determination to prevent any organization of railway mail clerks from affiliating with the federation. They say such an affiliation would be prejudicial to the interests of the department and make it impossible to maintain discipline in the service.

WOULD OPEN LOWER BRULE

Gamble Introduces Bill for Allotment of Reservation Land.

Washington, April 18.—A bill to open for settlement the surplus and unallotted lands of the Lower Brule Indian reservation in South Dakota has been introduced by Senator Gamble. Three hundred thousand acres are comprised, of which 130,000 acres have already been allotted. The bill authorizes the payment of $45,000 by the government to the Indians for state school lands.

Senator Gamble has received information from the interior department which indicates that the lands of the Rosebud Indian reservation in Mellette county, South Dakota, opened by a bill passed last year, will not be ready for opening until Oct. 1, or thereabouts. The appraisement has not yet been completed.

Divorce Causes Suicide.

Duluth, April 18.—Despondent because his wife sought a divorce from him Albert Gronquist committed suicide. He took poison in the corridor of an office building just outside the door of the office of his wife's attorney and died a few minutes after reaching the police station.

Holmer Defeats Ljungstrom.

New York, April 18.—Hans Holmer, the American long distance runner, defeated Gusta Ljungstrom of Sweden in a fifteen-mile indoor race here. Holmer's time was 1 hour, 21 minutes, and 53 seconds. Homer led at every mile.

SENATOR HITCHCOCK.

Nebraskan Stricken With Vertigo at Washington.

IS STRICKEN WITH VERTIGO

Senator Hitchcock of Nebraska Overcome on Street.

Washington, April 16.—Senator Gilbert M. Hitchcock of Nebraska was stricken with vertigo and fell unconscious to the sidewalk as he was entering the pension office. He was hurried to a hospital, where he was reported resting easy and his condition is not critical.

REGULARS LOSE ON A TEST VOTE

Showing of Hands in Senate on Popular Election.

Washington, April 18.—There was a showing of hands in the senate on the question of the popular election of senators. It came upon the question of reference to a committee of the senate of the resolution coming over from the house, which proposes a constitutional amendment providing for the election of senators by popular vote. The vice president referred the resolution to the committee on privileges and elections. This was regarded by many as a slap at the judiciary committee, which handled a similar resolution in the last session.

Later Senator Culberson moved to reconsider the action by which the resolution was referred to the committee on privileges and elections. The motion to reconsider prevailed, the Democrats and the twelve progressive Republicans voting together for Senator Culberson's motion and the regular Republicans voting in opposition.

CHINA BORROWS $50,000,000

American and European Capitalists Furnish Funds for Reforms.

The loan of $50,000,000 will be used in furnishing currency reforms and other interests of the Chinese empire.

Scott, president general of the organization, to the Daughters, whose twentieth annual congress opened here. The Sons of the American Revolution also were guests.

Gorgeous gowns vied with the rich flowers which filled every corner of the hall. The entire day, from the opening session in the morning, when President Taft welcomed the Daughters to the national capital, through the roll call and credential committee's report in the afternoon and up to the hour of midnight, when the reception was over, was one of busy preparation for the real work work of the congress, which will last throughout the week.

DEADLOCK IN THE SENATE

Minnesota Legislative Wheels at Complete Standstill.

St. Paul, April 18.—With the senate in a deadlock—prevented by Senator Duxbury from considering any of the pending bills and prevented by Senator Boyle from taking action on the Duxbury-Moonan-Haycraft-Wels reapportionment constitutional amendment measure until every member was in his seat—the upper branch of the legislature came to a standstill.

The Moonan bill, calling for a constitutional amendment to limit the number of senators from any one county to six, was passed by the house by a vote of 65 to 52. This vote did not come until the bill had been amended by increasing the number from six to seven.

DRINK HABIT CURED "TO STAY CURED".

It is idle to preach of the evils of intemperance for everyone is familiar with them. It also is of little use telling the victim of the liquor or drug habit that the indulgence is injurious to him, that it not only wastes his substance, undermines his health and brings him into disgrace but ultimately entails sorrow and misery upon his family and makes him an object of loathing and contempt as well. The chances are he realizes all this far better than anyone else. The trouble is, his will power is so weakened and the craving is so great that he can't stop. He simply can't. He's got to have help. That help is just what has been giving the past thirteen years and it is with not a little pride that we point to our record when we think of the hundreds of poor unfortunates we have rescued from a fate worse than death—a drunkard's grave—the homes united and made happy and the tears for joy of the mothers, wives and children.

The Juliet Murray Lang Institute,

The cravings for alcoholic stimulants or narcotic drugs can be permanently removed by the Juliet Murray Lang Institute. That fact is well established. It matters not how a person becomes addicted to the habit or of how long duration it may be or how strong the craving or desire has become, the Juliet Murray Lang Institute soon gives relief. We destroy the appetite for drink, remove the alcohol from the system and then build the system up to its normal condition, leaving the patient mentally and physically the same as he was before the drink habit was formed.

The cost of treatment includes board and medicines and the services of the physician in charge. The terms are most reasonable and will be furnished upon application. If you have a friend or relative afflicted with the drink or drug habit you will be doing a worthy and charitable act in recommending him to the [illegible] (Correspondence strictly private)

CURING CATARRH.

Accept Our Advice and Try This Remedy at Our Risk.

Catarrh is a disease of the mucous membrane. The mucous membrane is, one may say, the interior lining of the body. Catarrh therefore may exist in any part of the system.

When the catarrhal poison attacks the mucous membrane, inflammation and congestion are produced and nature fails to throw off the accumulated poisons. The organ which has been afflicted ceases to perform its proper function as nature intended it should. The result is, complication upon complication, which may lead to other even more serious afflictions.

We honestly believe Rexall Mucu-Tone will do wonders toward overcoming catarrh. It is made from the prescription of an eminent physician who made a long study of catarrh, and his great success with this remedy was an enviable one.

We want you if you are a sufferer from catarrh in any form, to give Rexall Mucu-Tone a thorough trial. Use it with regularity and persistency for a reasonable time, then if you are not satisfied, come back and tell us, and without question or formality we will hand back to you every cent you paid us. This is certainly the fairest offer that any one could make and should attest our sincerity of purpose. It comes in two sizes, prices 50 cents and $1.00. Remember you can obtain it only at—The Rexall Store

System

This is the day of system and the man who does not systematize his work or business is the one who complains of hard times. The modern man uses a modern system and can figure on the future. One of the most necessary parts of such a system is a Bank Account with a strong, progressive bank. The man or business firm that wants to start now to properly systematize should come in and see us. We can probably offer some valuable suggestions.

THE PURPOSE OF ALL IS THE PROGRESS OF HUMANITY

VOL. XXII, THIEF RIVER FALLS, MINNESOTA, FRIDAY, April 28th, 1911. NO 36

ATTEMPTED ASSASSINATION

Miss Clara Coe This City Has Narrow Escape. Bullet thru Window at Night.

Miss Clara Coe had a very narrow escape from an assassin's bullet last Tuesday evening about 9 o'clock in her father's home on the East Eide at the south end of St. Paul Avenue.

While the family were gathered in the evening after their toils, all save Mr. Peter Coe being at home, they were suddenly startled by a shot from out of doors near the window and the falling of broken glass and the screams of Miss Clara, joined by those of the other girls in their fright. A face peeked in at the window with a hand on either side to shut out too much light and possibly to conceal as much of the features as possible. The dastard was evidently over anxious to know the effects of his shot.

Mrs. Coe snatched up a shot-gun and fired at the window. The fellow let out a yell, but probably escaped unscatched. Neighbors heard his footsteps coming and going.

The bullet he fired into the house passed through the glass and also a curtain drawn down about two feet, is barely grazed the sheek of Miss Clara and struck her ear with force enough to make it swell up and it impaired her hearing of that ear for some days. The bullet finally struck the rear wall of the room, but, this being covered with heavy felt, it had not force enough left to bury itself in the wall, but penetrated one third inch and then fell out and was lost.

The police were notified immediately but no clue has been found and all is shrouded in mystery. There seems no way of determining who did the deed.

LIGHTS ON AUTOS.

Chief of Police, Lang calls our attention to the state law which provides that the lamps on automobiles shall be lit up not later than an hour after sunset and up to an hour before sunrise. For infractions of this law heavy fines are provided, and it behooves our automobile-riding public to take notice and comply with the provisions of said law, for ignorance will excuse no one. An accident may happen at any time and then you will be glad if you go scott-free at least on that point. It is not a part of wisdom to take chances needlessly.

CARD OF THANKS

We wish to express our sincere thanks to our many friends who so kindly decorated the church and in other ways showed their friendships at the time of the death of our husband and father.

Mrs. J. H. Jacobson,

Bids Rejected.

The board of County Commissioners had a meeting last Saturday after noon at which they opened and acted Falls—$6,500, and Ed. Krohn of this court house. Only two bids were received and both of them were considered too high and were rejected and new bids will be advertised for and will be received by the Board up to Monday, May 15th.

The two bids received were as follows: James Brady of Red Lake Falls—$6,500, and Ed. Khron of this city—$6,339.

This City Gets Aid

Thief River Falls is among the lucky cities that will get a state aid of $2,500 for providing a course in agriculture, manual training and domestic science. There are nineteen others in the state, among which are Bemidji and Warren. Ten high schools of the state have been working under a similar law for the past two years, but now their number will be increased to twenty.

Bourque-Madden

At the very early hour Wednesday morning occurred the marriage of Miss Elizabeth Bourque and Mr. James Madden both of this city. The wedding took place at St. Bernard's Catholic church the Rev. Fr. Adolph Dingman officiating.

The bride was most becomingly gowned in a dark blue traveling suit and was attended by her sister, Miss Josephine, while her brother, Leon Bourque of Noyes, acted as best man. Only the immediate friends of bride and groom were present at the ceremony.

A most delightful and dainty wedding breakfast was served at the home of the bride's sister, Mrs. W. B. Fuller, with whom the bride has hade her home for several years.

The happy couple left on the six fifteen train for the Twin Cities and Fairbault and upon their return will go to house keeping in the A. A. Anderson cottage on the East Side. which the groom has recently purchased and where they will be at home to their friends after May fifteenth.

The Press joins with the numerous friends of the bride and groom in wishing them a happy and prosperous future.

MAIL ORDER CATALOGUES

The retail merchant has a great deal to learn from the study of mail order catalogues, one or more of which decorates the tables in many homes Let them learn how it is that foreign concerns can come in under their very noses and get the order for things that can be bought to better advantage at home.

Where the catalogue wins over the poorly written advertisebent, is in defiteness of description. The frequent cuts help enormously. But even where no cut is used, somebody takes the trouble to describe the fabrics, the appearance, the designs of the goods so clearly, that the reader thinks he can see just how they look.

Could he but see the same goods with his own eyes in the home stores, and ask a few questions about them, he would be apt to find some defect which the clever catalogue writer carefully omitted to speak about.

But the host of orders these catalogues draw out show what can be done, against the handicaps of distance and public suspicion, by terse, straightforward conversational description of goods, plus statement of prices.

But any local merchant can beat the catalogue houses in many ways. What he needs to do is to tell the people about his goods and prices.

And there is no other way of doing this half so effectively as through the columns of the newspaper which the people subscribe for and read.—Commercial Club.

PASTOR COMING

Rev. C. E. Boyden of Two Harbors, Minn., who filled the pulpit of the Presbyterian church here a couple of Sundays the first part of April, we learn has accepted a call to this charge and is expected to come here next week and take up the work.

CARD OF THANKS

I desire herewith to thank all those neighbors and friends who have so generously helped us first during the fire and then financially since. I desire especially to thank Charles Alexander for the generous way in which he has given his time and money to make us comfortable.—Mrs. Iver Peterson.

A PIONEER WOMAN GONE

Mrs. Ole Rude of this City Came Here in 1885.

Mrs. Ole Rude passed away at her home in this city Tuesday morning April 25, 1911 at 5 o'clock, a victim of chronic bronchitis. Her madian name was Rose Bailey. She was the first white child born at Sauk Centre, Minn., and was at the time of her death 46 years, 2 months and 15 days old.

She moved with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. John Bailey, from Sauk Centre to this vicinity in 1885 when they settled on a homestead in the town of Excel. Three years later she was married to Ole Rude and lived in the town of East Valley near Thorwick until five years ago when her health began failing and they moved to this city and her husband engaged in the jewelry business. These latter years she was hardly able to do her house work and her health failed more and more till the end came. Her niece, Mrs. Adolph Zuberbier of Badger, was with her during the latter part of her illness and at her death-bed, besides her family.

Deceased was a member of the Presbyterian church of this place and was held in high esteem by all who knew her. She has suffered long, but now God has called her home where sickness and suffering are no more.

Besides her husband, she leaves four children, Edward, John, Mary and Ervine, to mourn the loss of a true, kind, and loving wife and mother. Deceased also has a sister, Mrs. C. B. Smith of Cloverdale, Cal., and three brothers, Richard Bailey of Chestertown, N. Y., Bony Bailey, Sauk Centre, Minn., and Risty Bailey of Fisher, Minn.

The funeral was held Thursday from the Presbyterian church Rev. L. G. Hughes of Red Lake Falls officiating, and the remains were laid to rest in the Greenwood cemetery till the Life Giver comes.

The bereaved family have the sympathy of the entire community. No earthly loss can be greater than the loss of a life-campanion, or the loss of a loving mother. She leaves an emptiness in the hearts of her own which none other can fill. Hollowed is her memory. Peace to her soul.

• • •

Now we only see our Mother,
  Once so loving, joyous gay.
Sleeping in her coffin,
  White as marble, cold as clay.
Yet we know her gentle spirit,
  Purified, has soared on high.
Though she sleeps in yonder graveyard,
  Yet she lives above the sky.
Yes, our mother now is sleeping,
  Sleeping her last dreamless sleep.
While the stars, far, far above here,
  Nightly vigils oe'r her keep.

ED. PORTER DEAD

Edward Porter died last Monday at the home of his brother, Christopher H. Porter of this city, from an attack of pneumonia.

Deceased was born in England, was a surveyor by occupation, was unmarried and at the time of his death was 56 years old.

He came here about a week ago on a visit with his brother and while here took ill and died.

The funeral was held Wednesday from the M. E. church, Rev. J. B. Smith officiating. Interment was at Greenwood cemetery near this city.

A brother of the deceased from Garfield, Minn., Ed Porter, was here attending the funeral.

JOHANNES AMUNDSON DEAD.

Johannes Amundson was born in 1831 near the Village of Kangsvinger Norway. In 1860 he was married to Ingre Mary Bratberg and three years later they emigrated to America, and have lived at various places in Minnesota since that time. First they lived in Alenaki County then Chickasaw County, Iowa, from there they moved to Murray County, Minn., where he was converted to God in 1885. After living there by the grace of God as a shining light for the Lord for twenty-five years, he, with his wife moved to Bellingham and a few years later to Thief River Falls.

Here he passed away silently after two weeks of illness, happy in the Lord whom he longed to see in Glory, his death occurring Thursday evening, April 20, at 7 p. m.

Messages were immediately sent to his absent children namely: J. J. Amundson, Volin, S. Dak.; Mrs. O. Martin, South Shore and O. J. Amundson Starkweather, N. Dak., all of whom were present at the funeral services held in the Free Mission church Monday afternoon, April 24th. Interment was made at the Greenwood cemetery.

Besides the children mentioned he leaves his wife and two other daughters, Mrs. J. H. Jacobson and Mrs. O. N. Olson of this city.

Big Celebration

The Sons of Norway are making arrangements for a great celebration here on the 17th of May this year. They have secured the Auditorium for the occision and the noted actor and speaker of Minneapolis, Anton Sanders, who has 35 years experience as public entertainer and comes here highly praised in his work by all that have heard him. He will be the chief speaker of the day and it is planned that he shall deliver an oration in the afternoon. In the evening there will be rendered a program of song, music, speaking and acting, to which there will be a small admission fee charged; and after that there will be a banquet at the Antler's Club Rooms. It is expected to make this the greatest and most successful May 17th celebration ever held in Thief River Falls. A more complete program will be given later.

Interview With James J. Hill

St. Paul, Minn., April 27, 1911 James J. Hill, the Great Northern-Northern Pacific railroad magnate, sees in publicity of corporation matters and intelligent public control of the corporations themselves, a long step towards the solution of the present era of buisness stagnation.

"And the United States needs a saviour," says Mr. Hill. "The people have demanded not only the best but an improvement on the best, and they will now have to pay accordingly. If they don't pay in money, they must pay in prosperity. The business of the country increases 15 per cent every year; the facilities for handling this new business increase only 1-6 of that. The difference in the ratio is too great and a balance must be struck, sometime, else there will be a complete breakdown of service or prosperity.

"Why don't the facilities for handling business increase more rapidly? Because the men behind those facilities are afraid to spend their money for extensions and improvements."

Mr Hill has long been an exponent of publicity of corporation affairs and looks upon that as one of the means of bringing corporation and public together.

"The people are entitled to know what the public service corporatiodns are doing and the conditions under which they transact business," the says,". I have believed in, and have advocated publicity of corporaton reports for many years. When the public becomes conversant with corporation affairs and is convinced that it is seeing from the inside, much of the feeling against the great business concerns will pass away. That will be one of the effects of publicity."

In the matter of public control of quasi-public concerns, Mr. Hill is a firm advocate, but he wants that control to be intelligent; he wants only trained men in the places of control.

"A corporation is a piece of paper bearing the stamp and seal of the state," he says. "Its life is created by the people and naturally the people shouldd have some word in making the rules under which it transacts business. That proposition is one I have preached for years and now I am glad to see it making headway among carrier corporations. Last week President Mudge of Rock Island railroad declared for public control of railroads: George M. Reynolds, president Continental and Commercial National bank of Chicago did the same thing the week before: T. N. Vail, president American Telephone and Telegraph recently made an official report to his board of directoirs in which he took a firm stand for both publicity and public control.

"But that control must be intelligently administered. Public control simply because it is a control by the public, is not all. It must be intelligent, as I have always contended. Intelligent people will ask and expect nothing more. Vail, Reynolds and the others are right in advocating publicity and public control. Both are things which eventually will go far towards making a good feeling between the corporations and the people, and will assist in settling much of the antogonism which now seems to prevail."

ODD FELLOWS

The Independent Order of Odd Fellows had a district meeting last Tuesday night here. F. H. Castner. Grand Master of Minneapolis and A. L. Bolton, Grand Secretary of St. Paul were both present. Visiting members were present from Badger and St. Hilaire. The evening was taken up with initiation ceremonies, instructions by the Grand Officers present, and finally a social lunch.

LEGISLATURE'S FITTING FINISH

Senate Adjourns through mistake. The Legislative Graveyard.

It was a fitting finish. A legislature, which has emphasized itself as an unparalled prodigy of expense and impotency, ended in disorder. In its dying days everything happened save the things which should have happened. Instead of meeting the issue of the session honestly and making a belated effort to justify their existence, these statesmen expended their last energies in evasion and subterfuge, profanity and imprecations. There were fights and fiascos.

In the Senate two of the most vital reform measures had just been reached when the standpatters sought safety for the special interests in final adjournment. The motion to adjourn the session sine die was made and lost by the following vote:

FOR ADJOURNMENT:—Anderson, Boyle, Carpenter, Clague, Coller, L. O. Cooke, Denegre, Dunn, Duxbury, Fosseen, Froshaug, Glotzbach, Gunn, C. D. Johnson, Johnston, Klein Mardon, Murray, Olson, Poehler, Pugh, Rockne, Rustad, Stebbins, G. H. Sullivan, J. D. Sullivan, Swanson, Van Hoven, Wallace and Weis—30.

AGAINST FINAL ADJOURNMENT:—Ahmann, Bedford, Benson, Cashman, Cheadle, C. F. Cook, Dale, Donaldson, Dues, Dwinnell, Elwell, Gunderson, Hackney, Handlan, Hanson, Haycraft, V. L. Johnson, Lende, L'Herault, McGrath, Moonan, Nelson Odell, Pauly, Peterson, Putnam, Sageng, Saugstad, Schaller, Sundberg, Thoe, Wilson, and Works.—33.

Here occurred one of the most lamentable accidents in the history of Minnesota law-making. Assistant Secretary W. A. Simonton announced to Lieutenant-Governor Gordon that the vote was 33 for to 30 against the motion and that official declared the Senate adjournment. Instantly there was a scattering and when the mistake was discovered it seemed impossible to reassemble the Senators.

Perhaps it was not an accident, although I believe that it was. But the people will be indignant, and justly so, because the mistake defeated the recall and the extension of the primary to state officers. The thirty-three who voted against adjournment and a few others would have voted for the bills which were pending when the Senate was thus illegally dissolved.

As to the House, no words of mine can adequately describe the disgraceful scene at the close. In that body, a bunch of brewery members, threatening physical force if necessary to attain their end, gathered beneath the clock and prevented the hands being turned back as has been done in every session for years. These spigot statesmen thus compelled the adbjournment of the House and defeated bills like the extension of local option rights to cities of the fourth class and the new child labor law.

In this connection Speaker Dunn is reported as saying that he ought to have smashed the clock. A better way for him would have been to have smashed the reactionary House machine three months before. Had the House not been organized as it was, important business would not have delayed until the last minute. By giving them every advantage the Speaker himself played the game of the interests and politicians, which was delay and disorder.

There is not space here to more than suggest a few things. In a very short time I expect to tell the whole story of the session in "The Minnesota Legislature of 1911," which will follow the general lines of the volume on the 1909 legislature. For the present note these characteristics:

The Minnesota Legislature of 1911 will live in history for certain things. It has been characterized by disgraceful scenes of disorder.

It has been marked by almost unprecendented political plunder and extravagance.

It was influenced by the most open powerful and pernicious brewery loby ever known.

No session ever had so many farcical investigations and white-washes.

The House had a speaker who was partial to the reactionary element.

There was a wholesale slaughter of progressive legislation.

Both branches manifested a tendency away from fundamental democracy and toward the professional politician. It was a legislature for the rich and the reactionary.

There was shrewdly conceived and executed lack of team work between House and Senate.

The House adjourned under a cloud, not daring to give consideration to the Klemer-Stone indictment that the special interests controlled the organization.

THE SESSION PRODUCED

The Oregon plan of electing United States senators by the people.
An able, impartial and dignified presiding officer of the senate chosen by the people.
The Dunn good roads bills, which do not in any economic or political way effect the special interests.

The series of letters of which this is the last, has not given a very comprehensive view of the situation I fear. Nor is this final one complete. It would require a volume to fully and fairly explain the reasons for the unsatisfactory results of the session.

First Ball Practice

The first baseball practise of the season took place Sunday at the Fair Grounds when the local players and Commercial Travelers played a practise game. The score was 18 to 7 in favor of the locals. The aerial score was due to the fact that none of the men had been out to practise yet this season, and for this reason no detailled account is desirable. A large and enthusiastic crowd helped the boys keep up their flogging energies.

Both teams had plenty of material, especially the locals who tried out several men in the various positions. There is no doubt about Thief River having a ball team if the men will get out and practise and, after doing that, receive the liberal support of the citizens.

The first regular game will not be played before a week from Sunday when the team will likely go to Red Lake Falls. Next Sunday will be given up to practise, so as to get the men acquainted with each other and develop some team work.

It is rumored that the reason why the Travelers kept up their energy and enthusiasm so well thruout the game was due to the ginger spreading qualities of their elegant new uniforms. The suits are pure white with black trimmings, and sure are the neatest rags ever seen in Thief River.

90,000 Petition Congress

Washington, April 21st.—Ninety thousand citizens of the United States petitioned Congress to-day to withdraw the troops from the Mexican border. It required three men to carry it to the speaker's platform, when the house convened, huge bundles of petitions submitted by Victor Berger, the socialist member from Wisconsin.

"What is all this?" asked Speaker Clark, in surprise. Mr. Berger explained that the petitions had been received from residents of every state except Deleware, and from every territory except Alaska.

They declare that the presence of the troops is aiding in the suppression of what the petitioners believe to be a just struggle for liberty.

Prospective Pastor.

Rev. A. Lindgren of International Falls, who has been called to take charge of the Swedish Lutheran congregation at this place came down here Wednesday to get better acquainted with conditions here, and on Wednesday evening he preached to a good sized and attentive audience at the new church building of this organization on Horace Avenue. His sermon was well received, but as yet he has not given out whether he will accept or not; though he was favorably impressed with the town.

FARMERS' FREE BILL

This the Sugar Coating of the Canadian Reciprocity Bill.

Washington, D. C., April 27, 1911. In the opinion of Mr. N. J. Bachelder president of the National Grange the farmers of the Northwest and the country in general will not be satisfied with the so-called "farmers" free list bill", which the Democrats are pushing. The president of the grange stated that this bill, which is being put to the front to reconcile the farmers, will not cause them to relax their fight against Canadian reciprocity. In the opinion of Mr. Bachelder the farmers of the Northwest will receive very little, if any benefit from the "free list bill," which does not reduce the high tariff taxes on the articles generally purchased by them.

One reason why the Democrats brought in the "free list bill" was to get the support of those Republicans who were opposed to Canadian reciprocity. Insurgents will oppose the Canadian bill just as bitterly as though there were no "free list bill" Even though they favor the latter measure as a move towards reduction in tariff schedules they will take no chances, fearing that it may fail to be enacted into law. They will therefore vote their convictions in opposition to Canadian reciprocity just as if they knew nothing about a "free list bill." The opinion prevails that the Canadian reciprocity bill will pass the Senate, notwithstanding the strong opposition to it from the entire agricultural districts of the country.

Stand-pat and Insurgent House Republicans found a common enemy in the Canadian reciprocity bill and this situation brought about some amusing incidents during the debate. Organization Republicans like Fordney, Cannon and Dalzell applauded speeches of Insurgents, who spoke in opposition to the trade pact. This same situation brought Dalzell and Davis of Minnesota into apparent co-operation and led to the newspaper story somewhat widely circulated that Insurgent Davis and Standpat Dalzell and Cannon had formed a hard-and-fast alliance for the purpose of opposing reciprocity. The Minnesota Insurgent does not deny that he is opposed to reciprocity. He did deny pretty strongly, however, the insinuation that he was acting as the lieutenant of Cannon, Dalzell or any of the so-called regular Republicans. In discussing the matter Mr. Davis said: "I am opposed to reciprocity, along with others. Some of the regular Republicans are also opposed. During the debate on Saturday regulars and insurgents were breaking into the discussion on the floor. I happened to occupy a seat near Mr. Dalzell and Mr. Cannon, both of whom are opposed to Canadian reciprocity. I am glad if these gentlemen are coming around to my point of view, and see in the ratification of the proposed treaty untold injury to our agricultural classes. Of course, I shall continue my course in Congress as a Progressive Republican. The assertion that I have formed an alliance with Cannon and Dalzell is as ridiculous as it is unfounded."

• • •

The National Monetary Commission, with former Senator Aldrich as the chairman, is on decidely shaky ground, with the prospect of its being abolished before many months have elapsed. Senator Cummins of Iowa started the ball rolling when he introduced a bill requiring the commission to make a report to Congress next December, after which it should cease to exist. The monetary commission was created in 1908 for the purpose of getting together banking statistics and furnishing to Congress report upon which to revise our banking system. Besides this, the commission has been the means of furnishing a soft berth to "lame ducks." All its members, when appointed, were members of either the House or Senate, but when they retired from Congress they were continued on the commission at a salary of $7,500 a year. The Commission has been the means of continuing in the government employ and at the same salary Senators and Representatives who were recently retired. The commission has a suite of about twenty rooms in the Senate Office Building, finely furnished, and in addition the individual members have, in some instances, separate rooms. The commission is said to have spent something like $200,000 during the three years of its existance.

GERMANTOWN

Seeding is in full blast and another week like the last one, the bulk of it will be done.

Our boys are speculating on a base ball club. The beginning was made last Sunday, and a good game was played. Emil Hanson acted as umpire.

The little ones are happy today as there is no school for them, as the big ones will have examinations.

The two walking dredges are going steady but the floaters are held by the frost yet. They claim there is about 2 feet of solid stuff yet.

The telephone boys out east had to quit setting poles, as the frost is rather hard to get thru in the low lands and then besides spring work is here.

P. B. Malberg, Jr., was around last week with his stallion, the horse made a good impression on the most of the farmers, though he returned home too quick to visit them; suppose he will soon come back.

Jay Payne is putting in his new farm, recently purchased from John Dommer.

John Phillips got through with one batch of chickens, 26 from 200 makes John look rather suspicious on the incubator, tho everything has to be learned and John is not the fellow to get discouraged by one failure.

IMPROVEMENT OF THE DAIRY HERD

Co-operative Breeding Association.

The common cows of Minnesota kept for dairying average only 160 pounds of butter yearly. Common cows of the dairy type kept on the Northern Experiment farm at Grand Rapids have averaged 250 pounds of butter yearly. Dairy bred cows kept on the Experiment Farm at St. Anthony park have averaged over 300 pounds of butter yearly.

Between the common cows of the state and the common cows kept on the Northern Experiment farm there is a difference of 90 pounds of butter a year, or a cash difference of $22.50. This is due to a difference in care and feeding and lack of judicious selection on the part of the farmer: keeping a cow regardless of her type and performance.

Between the common cows of the state and the dairy bred cows kept on the experiment farm at St. Anthony Park there is a difference of 140 pounds of butter yearly or a cash difference of $35 due to a lack of breeding along with the other causes mentioned—feeding, care and selection.

No further argument is necessary to show the importance of improvement in the dairy herd of the average farm.

Improvement must begin with better feed and more of it. Clover replaces the marsh hay for winter feed, and the brush pasture must be cleared up and disked and sown to clover, timothy and blue grass for summer feed.

The barns must be so constructed that the cows will be comfortable during the half year they must be kept in doors and the dairy work so systematized that the feeding and milking are done with regularity.

The dairy cow that will produce six, eight and even ten thousand pounds of milk in a single year is the greatest improvement on nature that has been made, and she won't do it unless she is protected and fed and cared for just in proportion. When her conditions are similar and some times worse than those of the wild cow under natural conditions on the plains she will go back to what nature intended her to do, give milk enough for her young.

Better conditions do not mean conditions so expensive that they are impractical for the average farmer. The log barn built by the farmer himself for his few cows may be made as comfortable and cleanly and in every way as suitable for a dairy barn as need be.

The big barn and the big expense don't necessarily make the profitable cow. It is in doing well the little everyday details of dairy work, and in having a cow that is capable of producing from 250 to 300 pounds of butter a year when her conditions are made favorable to that production.

Improving the Breed—There are three essential parts to improving the dairy herd: 1st, feed, care, etc.; 2nd, selection of the individual cow that is a good producer, and this can be known only thru keeping a record of the milk and butter produced by each individual cow; and 3rd, by using a dairy bred sire of known dairy quality that will transmit this quality to his heifers.

THERE ARE TWO CLASSES OF TRADE

One wants the cheapest paper, not very particular about the printing, just so the price is "cheap."

Today he places his order with you and the next time with your competitor.

He buys from the fellow who is willing to sacrifice a legitimate profit to land the order.

He helps to "keep your shop a-going" but he fails to help swell your bank account.

He may be a nice fellow but he is not profitable either from a financial or advertising standpoint.

• • • •

The other demands high grade work and first-class paper, is willing to pay the price if he can get what he wants, and when he gets a pob that is satisfactory, returns to the same printer for his next job.

It pays to take time to please him because he is the one who does "help swell your bank account," not once but keeps it up as long as you are giving him satisfaction.

• • • •

One wants quantity and gives you small returns, if any, while the other wants quality and is willing to pay for it.

The Original Paul Pry.

Thomas Hill, familiarly called Tommy Hill, was, says Dr. Brewer, the original Paul Pry. It was from him also that Theodore Hook drew his character of Gilbert Gurney. Planche in his "Recollections" says of Hill: "His specialty was the accurate information he could impart on all the petty details of the domestic economy of his friends, the contents of their wardrobes, their pantries, the number of pots of preserves in their store closets and of the table napkins in their linen presses, the dates of their births and marriages, the amounts of their tradesmen's bills and whether paid weekly or quarterly. He had been on the press and was connected with the Morning Chronicle. He used to drive Matthews crazy by ferreting out his whereabouts when he left London and popping the information in some paper."

Names In Electricity.

Electricity is the one branch of science that honors the great names in its fundamental terminology. Andre Marie Ampere was the French physicist who first measured the current and for whom the unit is named. The ohm bears the name of George S. Ohm, a German man of science who discovered the law on which the unit of electrical resistance is based. The volt is named for the Italian Volta, the greatest electrical authority of the eighteenth century, who was the first man to construct a rude electric battery. The farad, the unit of electrical capacity, is named in honor of the English physicist Faraday; the colomb, the unit of quantity, for the French physicist Coulomb, and the watt, the unit of power, for James Watt, the Scotch inventor who improved the steam engine.

Cavanagh, Forest Ranger

The Great Conservation Novel

By HAMLIN GARLAND

Copyright, 1910, by Hamlin Garland

The ranger watched the fugitive as he started back over the trail in this desperate defiance of his pursuers with far less confidence in the outcome than he had put into words.

"All depends on Wetherford himself. If his nerve does not fail him, if they take the uniform for granted and do not carry the matter to the supervisor, we will pull the plan through." And in this hope he rode away down the trail with bent head, for all this bore heavily upon his relationship to the girl waiting for him in the valley. He had thought Lize a burden, a social disability, but a convict father now made the mother's faults of small account.

The nearer he drew to the meeting with Lee Virginia the more important that meeting became. Cavanagh had seen Virginia hardly more than a score of times, and yet she filled his thought, confused his plans, making of his brain a place of doubt and hesitation. For her sake he had entered upon a plan to shield a criminal, to harbor an escaped convict. It was of no avail to argue that he was moved to shield Wetherford because of his heroic action on the peak. He knew perfectly well that it was because he could not see that fair, brave girl further disgraced by the discovery of her father's identity, for in the searching inquiry which would surely follow his secret would develop.

To marry her, knowing the character of her father and her mother, was madness, and the voice within him warned him of his folly. "Pure water cannot be drawn from corrupt sources," it is said. Nevertheless the thought of having the girl with him in the wilderness filled him with divine recklessness. While still he debated, alternately flushed with resolve to be happy and chilled by some strange dejection, he met Swenson, the young guard who guarded the forest on the South Fork.

As he rode up Cavanagh perceived in the other man's face something profoundly serious. He did not smile in greeting, as was usual with him, and, taking some letters from his pocket, passed them over in ominous silence. He had a face of such bitterness that it broke through even the absorbed and selfish meditation into which Cavanagh had been thrown.

"What's the matter, Swenson? You look as if you had lost a friend."

"I have," answered the guard shortly, "and so have you. The chief is out."

"What?"

"They've got him!" he exclaimed. "He's out."

Cavanagh sprang up. "I don't believe it! For what reason? Why?"

"Don't that letter tell you? The whole town is chuckling. Every criminal and plug ugly in the country is spitting in our faces this morning. Yes, sir, the president has fired the chief—the man that built up this forestry service. The whole works is going to h—, that's what it is. We'll have all the coal thieves, water power thieves, poachers and free grass pirates piling in on us in mobs. They'll eat up the forest. I see the finish of the whole business. They'll put some western man in—somebody they can work. Then where will we be?"

Cavanagh's young heart burned with indignation, but he tried to check the other man's torrent of protest.

"I can't believe it. There's some mistake. Maybe they've made him the secretary of the department or something."

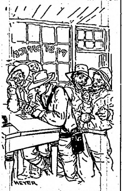
"No, they haven't. They've thrown him out. They've downed him because he tried to head off some thievery of coal mines in Alaska." The man was ready to weep with chagrin and indignant sorrow. His voice choked, and he turned away to conceal his emotion.

Cavanagh put the letter back into his pocket and mounted his horse. "Well, go on back to your work, Swenson. I'm going to town to get the supervisor on the wire and find out what it all means."

He was almost as badly stunned by the significance of Swenson's news as Swenson himself. Could it be possible that the man who had built up the field service of the bureau—the man whose clean handed patriotism had held the boys together, making them every year more clearly a unit, a little army of enthusiasts—could it be possible that the originator, the organizer of this great plan, had been stricken down just when his influence was of most account? He refused to believe it of an administration pledged to the cause of conservation.

As he entered the town he was struck instantly by the change in the faces turned toward him, in the jocular greetings hurled at him. "Hello, Mr. Cossack! What do you think of your chief now?"

"This will put an end to your infernal nonsense," said another. "We'll have a man in there now who knows the western ways and who's willing to boom things along. The cork is out of your forest bottle."



CAVANAGH PENNED HIS RESIGNATION AND MAILED IT.

Gregg was most offensive of all. "This means throwing open the forest to anybody that wants to use it—means an entire reversal of this fool policy."

"Wait and see," replied Cavanagh. But his face was rigid with the expression of the fear and anger he felt. With hands that trembled he opened the door to the telephone booth, closed it carefully behind him and called for the supervisor's office. As soon as Redfield replied he burst forth in question. "Is it true that the chief is out?"

Redfield's voice was husky as he replied. "Yes, lad; they've got him."

"Good Lord, what a blow to the service!" exclaimed Cavanagh with a groan of sorrow and rage. "What is the president thinking of to throw out the only man who stood for the future—the man who had built up this corps, who was its inspiration?" Then after a pause he added, with bitter resolution: "This ends it for me. Here's where I get off."

"Don't say that, boy. We need you now more than ever."

"I'm through. I'm done with America—with the States. I shall write my resignation at once. Send down another man to take my place."

Redfield's pleadings were of no avail. Cavanagh went directly from the booth to the postoffice, and there, surrounded by jeering and exultant citizens, he penned his resignation and mailed it. Then, with stern and contemptuous face, he left the place, making no reply to the jeers of his enemies, and, mounting his horse, mechanically rode away out upon the plains, seeking the quiet, open places in order to regain calmness and decision. He did not deliberately ride away from Lee Virginia, but as he entered upon the open country he knew that he was leaving her as he was leaving the forests. He had cut himself off from her as he had cut himself off from the work he loved. His heart was swollen big within his breast. He longed for the return of "the colonel" to the White House. "What manner of ruler is this who is ready to strike down the man whose very name means conservation and who in a few years would have made this body of forest rangers the most effective corps of its size in the world?" He groaned again, and his throat ached with the fury of his indignation.

"Dismissed for insubordination," the report said. "In what way? Only in making war on greed, in checking graft, in preserving the heritage of the people."

The lash that cut deepest was the open exultation of the very men whose persistent attempt to appropriate public property the chief had helped to thwart. "Redfield will go next. The influence that got the chief will get Hugh. He's too good a man to escape. Then, as Swenson says, the thieves will roll in upon us to slash and burn and corrupt. What a country! What a country!"

As he reached the end of this line of despairing thought he came back to the question of his remaining personal obligations. Wetherford must be cared for, and then—and then—there was Virginia waiting for him at this moment. "For her sake, to save her from humiliation, I will help her father to freedom."

This brought him back to the hideous tragedy of the heights, and with that thought the last shred of faith in the sense of justice in the state vanished.

"They will never discover those murderers. They will permit this outrage to pass unpunished like the others. It will be merely another 'dramatic incident' in the history of the range."

His pony of its own accord turned and by a circuitous route headed at last for the home canyon as if it knew its master's wavering mind. Cavanagh observed what he was doing, but his lax hand did not intervene. Helpless to make the decision himself, he welcomed the intervention of the homing instinct of his horse. With bent head and brooding face he returned to the silence of the trail and the loneliness of the hills.

CHAPTER XVII.

CAVANAGH'S LAST VIGIL BEGINS.

On his solitary ride upward and homeward the ranger searched his heart and found it bitter and disloyal. Love had interfered with duty, and pride had checked and defeated love. His path, no longer clear and definite, looped away aimlessly, lost in vague, obscure meanderings. His world had suddenly grown gray. He had no trade, no business, no special skill save in the ways of the mountaineer, and to return to his ancestral home in England at the moment seemed a woeful confession of failure.

It was again dusk as he rode up to his own hitching pole and slipped from the saddle.

Wetherford came out, indicating by his manner that he had recovered his confidence once more. "How did you find things in the valley?" he inquired as they walked away toward the corral.

"Bad," responded the ranger.

"In what way?"

"The chief has been dismissed, and all the rascals are chuckling with glee. I've resigned from the service."

Wetherford was aghast. "What for?"

"I will not serve under any other chief. The best thing for you to do is to go out when I do. I think by keeping on that uniform you can get to the train with me."

"Did you see Lize and my girl?"

"No; I only remained in town a minute. It was too hot for me. I'm done with it. Wetherford, I'm going back to civilization. No more wild west for me." The bitterness of his voice touched the older man's heart, but he considered it merely a mood.

"Don't lose your nerve. Mebbe this ends the reign of terror."

"Nothing will end the moral shiftlessness of this country but the death of the freebooter. That job was done by men who hated the dagoes—hated 'em because they were rival claimants for the range. It's nonsense to attempt to fasten it on men like Neill Ballard. The men who did that piece of work are well known stock owners."

"I reckon that's so."

"Well, now, who's going to convict them? I can't do it. I'm going to pull out as soon as I can put my books in shape, and you'd better go too."

They were standing at the gate of the corral, and the roar of the mountain stream enveloped them in a cloud of sound.

Wetherford spoke slowly: "I hate to lose my girl now that I've seen her, but I guess you're right. And Lize, poor old critter! It's a shame the way I've queered her life, and I'd give my right arm to be where I was twelve years ago, but with a price on my head and old age coming on I don't see myself ever again getting up to par. It's a losing game for me now."

There was resignation as well as despair in his voice, and Cavanagh felt it, but he said: "There's one other question that may come up for decision. If that Basque died of smallpox you may possibly take it."

"I've figured on that, but it will take a day or two to show on me. I don't feel any ache in my bones yet. If I do come down you keep away from me. You've got to live and take care of Virginia."

"She should never have returned to this accursed country," Cavanagh harshly replied, starting back toward the cabin.

The constable, smoking his pipe beside the fireplace, did not present an anxious face. On the contrary, he seemed plumply content as he replied to the ranger's greeting. He represented very well the type of officer which these disorderly communities produce. Brave and tireless when working along the line of his prejudices, he could be most laxly inefficient when his duties cut across his own or his neighbor's interests. Being a cattleman by training, he was glad of the red herring which the Texas officer had trailed across the line of his pursuit.

This attitude still further inflamed Cavanagh's indignant hate of the country. The theory which the deputy developed was transparent folly. "It was just a case of plain robbery," he argued. "One of them dagoes had money, and Neill Ballard and that man Edwards just naturally follered him and killed the whole bunch and scooted. That's my guess."

An hour later the sound of a horse's hoofs on the bridge gave warning of a visitor, and as Cavanagh went to the door Gregg rode up, seeking particulars as to the death of the herder and the whereabouts of the sheep.

The ranger was not in a mood to invite the sheepman in, and, besides, he perceived the danger to which Wetherford was exposed; therefore his answers were short. Gregg, on his part, did not appear anxious to enter.

"What happened to that old hobo I sent up?" he asked.

Cavanagh briefly retold his story, and at the end of it Gregg grunted. "You say you burned the tent and all the bedding?"

"Every thread of it. It wasn't safe to leave it."

"What ailed the man?"

"I don't know, but it looked and smelled like smallpox."

The deputy rose with a spring. "Smallpox! You didn't handle the cuss?"

Cavanagh did not spare him. "Somebody had to lend a hand. I couldn't see him die there alone, and he had to be buried, so I did the job."

Gregg recoiled a step or two, but the deputy stood staring, the implication of all this sinking deep. "Were you wearing the same clothes you've got on?"

"Yes, but I used a slicker while working around the body."

"Good king!" The sweat broke out on the man's face. "You ought to be arrested."

Ross took a step toward him. "I'm at your service."

"Keep off!" shouted the sheriff.

Ross smiled, then became very serious. "I took every precaution, Mr. Deputy. I destroyed everything that could possibly carry the disease. I burned every utensil, including the saddle—everything but the man's horse and his dog."

The officer caught up his hat and coat and started for the door. "It's me for the open air," said he.

As the men withdrew Ross followed them and, standing in his door, delivered his final volley. "If this state does not punish those fiends every decent man should emigrate out of it, turning the land over to the wolves, the wildcats and other beasts of prey."

Gregg as he retreated called back: "That's all right, Mr. Ranger, but you'd better keep to the hills for a few weeks. The settlers down below won't enjoy having a man with smallpox chassaying around town. They might rope and tie you."

Wetherford came out of his hiding place with a grave face.

"They're right about our staying clear of town," said Cavanagh. "They'll quarantine us sure."

Wetherford now that the danger of arrest was over was disposed to be grimly humorous. "There's no great loss without some small gain. I don't think we'll be troubled by any more visitors, not even by sheriffs or doctors. I reckon you and I are in for a couple of months of the quiet life—the kind we read about."

Cavanagh now that he was definitely out of the forest service perceived the weight of every objection which his friends and relatives had made against his going into it. It was a lonely life and must ever be so. It was all very well for a young unmarried man who loved the woods and hills beyond all things else and who could wait for advancement, but it was a sad place for one who desired a wife. The ranger's place was on the trail and in the hills, and to bring a woman into these high silences, into these lone reaches of forest and fell, would be cruel. To bring children into them would be criminal.

All the next day, while Wetherford pottered about the cabin or the yard, Cavanagh toiled at his papers, resolved to leave everything in the perfect order which he loved. Whenever he looked round upon his belongings, each and all so redolent of the wilderness, he found them very dear. His chairs, which he had rived out of slabs; his guns, his robes, his saddles and their accouterments—all meant much to him. "Some of them must go with me," he said, "and when I am settled down in the old home I'll have one room to myself which shall be so completely of the mountain America that when I am within it I can fancy myself back in the camp."

He thought of South Africa as a possibility and put it aside, knowing well that no other place could have the same indefinable charm that the Rocky mountains possessed for the reason that he had come to them at his most impressionable age. Then, too, the United States, for all its faults, seemed merely an extension of the English form of government.

Wetherford was also moving in deep thought and at last put his perplexity into a question. "What am I to do? I'm beginning to feel queer. I reckon the chances for my having smallpox are purty fair. Maybe I'd better drop down to Sulphur and report to the authorities. I've got a day or two before the blossoms will begin to show on me."

Cavanagh studied him closely. "Now, don't get to thinking you've got it. I don't see how you could attach a germ. The high altitude and the winds up there ought to prevent infection. I'm not afraid for myself, but if you're able perhaps we'd better pull out tomorrow."

Later in the day Wetherford expressed deeper dejection. "I don't see anything ahead of me anyhow," he confessed. "If I go back to the 'pen' I'll die of lung trouble, and I don't know how I'm going to earn a living in the city. Mebbe the best thing I could do would be to take the pox and go under. I'm afraid of big towns," he continued. "I always was, even when I had money. Now that I am old and broke I daren't go. No city for me."

Cavanagh's patience gave way. "But, man, you can't stay here! I'm packing up to leave. Your only chance of getting out of the country is to go when I go and in my company." His voice was harsh and keen, and the old man felt its edge, but he made no reply, and this sad silence moved Cavanagh to repentance. His irritability warned him of something deeply changing in his own nature.

Approaching the brooding felon, he spoke gently and sadly. "I'm sorry for you, Wetherford, I sure am, but it's up to you to get clear away so that Lee will never by any possible chance find out that you are alive. She has a romantic notion of you as a representative of the old time west, and it would be a dreadful shock to her if she knew you as you are. It's hard to leave her, I know, now that you've seen her, but that's the manly thing to do—the only thing to do."

"Oh, you're right—of course you're right. But I wish I could be of some use to her. I wish I could kind of keep watch over her. I'd be glad enough to play the scullion in her kitchen. But if you're going to take her"—

"But I'm not," protested Ross. "I'm going to leave her right here. I can't take her."

Wetherford looked at him with steady eyes in which a keen light leaped. "Don't you intend to marry her?"

Ross turned away. "No; I don't. I mean it is impossible."

"Why not? Don't tell me you're already married?" He said this with menacing tone.

"No; I'm not married, but"— He stopped without making his meaning plain. "I'm going to leave the country and"—

Wetherford caught him up. "I reckon I understand what you mean. You consider Lize and me undesirable parents—not just the kind you'd cut out of the herd of your own free will. Well, that's all right. I don't blame you far as I'm concerned. But you can forget me—consider me a dead one. I'll never bother her nor you."

Cavanagh threw out an impatient hand. "It is impossible," he protested. "It's better for her and better for me that I should do so. I'm going back to my own people."

Wetherford was thoroughly roused now. Some part of his old time fire seemed to return to him. He rose from his chair and approached the ranger firmly. "I've seen you act like a man, Ross Cavanagh. You've been a good partner these last few days—a son couldn't have treated me better—and I hate to think ill of you. But my girl loves you—I could see that. I could see her lean to you."

Ross said slowly: "It will be hard for you to understand when I tell you that I care a great deal for your daughter, but a man like me—an Englishman—cannot marry, or he ought not to marry—for himself alone. There are so many others to consider—his friends, his sisters"—

Wetherford dropped his hand. "I see!" His tone was despairing. "When I was young we married the girls we loved in defiance of everything. But you are not that kind. You may be right. I'm nothing but a debilitated old cowpuncher branded by the state—a man who threw away his chance—but I can tell you straight I've learned that nothing but the love of a woman counts."

In the meantime Lee Virginia waited with increasing impatience for Ross Cavanagh's return, expecting each noon to see him appear at the door. But when three days passed without word or sign from him her uneasiness deepened into alarm. The whole town was profoundly excited over the murder, that she knew, and she began to fear that some of the ranger's enemies had worked their evil will upon him.

With this vague fear in her heart, she went forth into the street to inquire. One of the first men she met was Sifton, who was sitting, as usual, outside the livery barn door, smiling, inefficient, content. Of him she asked, "Have you seen Mr. Cavanagh?"

"Yes," he answered; "I saw him yesterday, just after dinner, down at the postoffice. He was writing a letter at the desk. Almost immediately afterward he mounted and rode away. He was much cut up over his chief's dismissal."

"Why has he not written to me," she asked herself, "and why should he have gone away without a word of greeting, explanation or goodby? It would have taken but a moment's time to call at the door."

The more she dwelt upon this neglect the more significant it became. After the tender look in his eyes, after the ardent clasp of his hand, the thought that he could be so indifferent was at once a source of pain and self reproach.

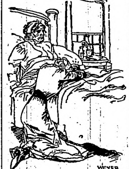
With childish frankness she went to Lize and told her what she had learned, her eyes dim with hot tears. "Ross came to town and went away back to his cabin without coming to see me."

"Are you sure he's been here?"

"Yes. He came in, got some letters at the postoffice and then rode away"— Her voice broke as her disappointment and grief overcame her.

Lize struggled to a sitting position. "There's some mistake about this. Ross Cavanagh never was the whiffling kind of man. You've got to remember he's on duty. Probably the letter was some order that carried him right back to his work."

"But if he had really cared he could have ridden by to say just a word. But he didn't. He went away without a sign after promising to come." She buried her face in the coverlet of her mother's bed and wept in childish grief and despair.



SHE BURIED HER FACE IN THE COVERLET.

Lize was forced to acknowledge that the ranger's action was inexplicable, but she did her best to make light of it. "He may have hurried to town on some errand and hadn't a moment to spare. These are exciting days for him, remember. He'll be in tomorrow sure."

On the Other Hand.

"On the one hand," said the teacher, pointing a long finger to the map on the classroom wall, "we have the far stretching country of Russia. On the other hand—what do I see on the other hand, Tommy?"

"Warts!" hazarded Tommy, hopeless with fright.

Superstitious.

"What! Did you let the examinations go by again, Carl?"

"I'll tell you, father. On the way to the college I met an old woman, and then I turned back again."—Fliegende Blatter.

OFFICIAL PAPER OF THE CITY.

FRIDAY, APRIL 28 1911.

Any fan will tell you that hitting the high ball does'nt improve the batt the high ball does'nt improve the batting average.

Mexico has practically reached a condition of anarchy. And the raw material out of which to build a real democratic republic is lacking.

Desiring to test the political intelligence of the people, a recent tourist asked a hotel waiter of the city of Mexico, to tell him who was mayor of that municipality.

"Porfiro Diaz," was the prompt reply.

"O, no, he's the president," said the traveller. "He's not the mayor."

"O, isn't he," asked the waiter? "I'll go ask."

Soon he brought back the information that a certain man was mayor. It afterward turned out that this man was not mayor at all, but governor of the federal province, a political division like one of our states. Similar inquiry in other restaurants showed lke misinformation.

When President Taft and President Diaz met at El Paso last year, it was reported and widely believed among the common people, that Diaz had literally sold Mexico to the Americans Terms and details of this deal were given.

What can you do with such a people to send them back to their cafes in peace?

THE D. A. R. TERS

A martial ancestry and hereditary scrappiness are shown usually in the national conventions of the Daughters of the American Revolution, who held their Continental Congress at Washington last week.

The President was naturally called in to pour the Taft smile over the troubled waters. But it still kept storming.

In the seclusion of their home circles, the Daughters are very calm and self contained persons. They give scrumptious social functions, at which graceful women distribute refreshments in heirlooms of colonial china, with the stateliness of an old time minuet. They read papers of literary distinction about the second cousin of George Washington's great aunts.

They are rarely people of large wealth. The prizes in our insurgent democracy are mostly won by raw sons of the soil who climbed by their own power rather than by the virtues of their predecessors. The Daughters have been all the more attractive for their aloofness from the new rich crowd. In their circles standards other than dollars have dominated. This isolation from the money worship of the times is welcome.

Not content with writing papers about the powder horns and shoulder straps of their grandfathers, they have undertaken to teach school children and foreigners something of our glorious American past. They have not urged undiscriminating adoration of flags and symbols, but have tried to teach practical duties of citizenship.

Serving so admirable a function, we all forgive them any pet foibles. If clubs are trumps, if the spirit of '76 is reincarnated in some scroppy meetings, who can deny them their little fun?

MODERN MERCHANDIZING

Some of the merchants who hold to the older business methods do not quite realize how modern trade has abandoned its former passive attitude.

Our older men will recall a time when buyers of manufactured goods used to visit the factories to make their purchases. Manufacturing then was pretty well concentrated in the Eastern states, and long and difficult journeys were taken to see the goods personally.

A manufacturer of those days would have laughed at the idea that he spend his good money in sending out salesmen on costly junketing trips to jolly up the retailers. He was sure of a certain trade by sitting in his tracks, and waiting for the business to come to his door.

Today the buyers sit down in their stores and wait for the manufacturers to send salesmen to see them, and manufacturers that fail to do this lose their trade. But a remnant of retailers still think they can do business on the old time principle of letting trade come to you. The public, however, assumes that the man who thus fails to play the game of modern merchandizing lacks confidence in his goods, since he is not willing to pay the ordinary expenses of selling them.

The newspaper advertisement serves with marvellous efficency as the retailer's travelling salesman. It tellls his story to thousands of readers in the time a salesman would spend talking to one customer.

THE PRODUCERS CO-OPERATIVE MARKET ASSOCIATION

The Producers' Co-operative Market association was organized to secure a market for the farmers of Northwestern Minesota who had no market; to enable farmers to ship their products where such products were most in demand.

This association was founded by a number of farmers' clubs, each club central organization are having a voice in its management.

The association has headquarters at Duluth where a manager is employed to look after the business.

Any local community of farmers in Northern Minnesota can organize a club and join the association for a membership fee of ten dollars. Five or more farmers are required in each local club to secure a membership in the association.

Farmers desiring to organize and join the association should write to the secretary, Mr. John S. Pardee, Duluth, Minn.

Benefits Of The Association

Farmers belonging to the association can ship vegetables, potatoes, veal, poultry products, in fact everything raised on the farm, and secure the prevailing market price.

The purpose of the association is not to compete with merchants in the farmers' home town, but rather to give farmers a market where there is no local market.

For a farmer to ship to the association and secure the market price, it is necessary for him to supply good products and have them put up in the way the trade wants them. Lettuce radishes and top onions will not sell in a gunny sack, but they will sell if put up in a certain kind of box that can be had from the association at the factory cost. In the same way, all products must be put up in the way the market calls for, and a farmer will take far more satisfaction out of his work after he learns how to put up his products for the market.

The manager of the Producers' Co-operative Market association, Mr. H. A. Hopkins, has written an article of instructions on the kind of products the association handles and the way to put them up. This bulletin introduces Mr. Hopkins' article which will be sent on application. It is recommended as worthy of the study of every farmer who grows such products, whether he belongs to the Producers' Co-operative Market association or not.

The Producers' Co-operative Market association is an effort for cooperation among farmers. Its success will mean much in the development of agriculture in Northern Minnesota and every farmer should be acquainted with this association. It has been in operation just one year and during that time it has handled nearly fifty thousand dollars worth of farm products. This amount is small in comparison with what may be accomplished but considering the fact that the association started with out capital, it must be considered good. The association begins its and can be of much greater service to the farmers. Its motto is to grow the best and to put only the best on the market and to secure the best prices. Through quality, uniformity and honesty, the Producers' Co-operative Market association aims to be of lasting good. Its work is educational as well as for greater profits for it is only through knowing how that a greater market can be secured. The article by Mr. Hopkins will be found of value in that it teaches how.

THE COST OR HORSE LABOR.

The tradition that "it dosen't cost anything to keep a horse when you live on a farm, is rudely shatterd in "Bulletin No. 15," by Prof. Thomas P. Cooper, just issued by the Extension Division of the College of Agriculture. The writer shows that, taking into account only such items as a city business man would consider in keepng a debit and credit account with a horse, every such animal really does cost the farmer a round sum for his keep.

First, there is the interest on the purchase-price or selling value of the horse. Putting the rate at 6 per cent and the value at only $150, the interest comes to $9.

Next, we must consider that the average working life of a horse does not exceed ten or twelve years; therefore, at least one-twelfth of his value must be annually charged to depreciation. There goes another $12.50 on the $150 horse; and if the animal is worth $300, the depreciation cost is doubled.

The average duration of a frame barn, according to underwriters' tables, is 40 years, and the capital per head, invested in such structures, may be said to average $60. Divide this by forty, and we have $1.50 as depreciation and $3 as interest, making the cost of shelter for a horse, per year, $4.50.

The items of use and depreciation of harness, shoeing and miscellaneous expenses add an average of at least $2.87 annually, and bring the total cost on the $150 animal up to $28.87, without any reference to the cost of feed and labor expended in caring for the horse. The farm value of the feed, based on accounts with 100 horses kept in different part of Minnesota, averages $54.84 per horse; the value of labor spent in caring for them, $15.25 per horse. These items bring the aggregate average cost of keeping a $150 horse in Minnesota for one year, up to $98.96. Mr. Cooper's tables, however, are based on an average valuation of considerably less than $150 per horse, and omit any allowance for the cost of barn-room or shelter; hence they make the cost of maintainance only about $85 per year.

Even at this lower figure, however, it will be seen that, with say four horses on the farm, the expenses entailed reaches the very respectable sum of $340 a year. As the work-horse on the average farm actually works only about 1,000 hours in a year, it is seen that the cost of horse labor, with the low-priced animals used as the basis of Mr. Cooper's figures, is 85 cents per day of ten hours.

A variety of suggestions are made, looking to a reduction of this heavy drain upon the farmer's resources. These include: (1) The use of more brood mares on the farm; (2) A better distribution of horse labor throughout the year, by diversified farming; (3) Reducing the number of work horses on the farm; (4) More economical methods of feeding; (5) The use, on small farms, of machinery requiring less horse power. Among these methods, the substitution of brood mares for the geldings most commonly employed will commend itself as the most desirable. It is demonstrated that mares in foal can, with care, be worked ten months in the year, not only without injury, but with advantage to both mare and foal. The three and four-year-old colts can be used, for much of the work, in the place of the aged horses now driven. And finally, the sale of colts will more than pay for the keep of the mares.

Mr. Cooper's bulletin (Extension Bulletin No. 15) deserves a careful reading by every Minnesota farmer. Extension bulletins are sent free on application to the Extension Division University Farm, St. Paul.—C. R. Barns, University Farm.

LESS SUNDAY WORK.

The movement to reduce the amount of Sunday work done in postoffices throughout the country promises to result in something which approaches more nearly a day of rest for the employees, without any very great inconvenience to the publis. The tendency has been in recent years to increase the Sunday burdens of postal employes, to add a little here and there, with the result that the day has been badly broken into, in not a few city postoffices, and the employees have been required to do work which, if the public had better Sunday mail habits, would be entirely unnecessary.

The assistant postmaster general has taken this matter into consideration within the past year and has come to the decision that a great deal of needless work is being done on Sundays in the postoffices and, that in thousands of offices it is entirely unnecessary to have the carriers' delivery window open at all for the delivery of Sunday mail, and that in most instances the general delivery window should be opened only for the distribution of mail claimed by transients. The view is taken that so far as result of habit rather than necessity, and that if it were an actual necessity for people to get their Sunday mail they should be willing to hire a private box in order to secure their letters with as little inconvenience to the postoffice employee.

Of course there are exceptions to this rule. Now and then there is an anxious father, a worried mother, or a man who has business pending and whose Sunday mail, unexpectedly important. If the carriers window is not opened, it might mean tedious, worrisome and perhaps costly delay. But in these days of telephones and the telegraph, there is little need for depending upon a letter service for the most important things. If a matter is so important that one can not wait another day for his mail, it is important enough, as a rule, to warrant the use of a wire rather than the postal service. And as for men in business, there are few of them who have not private boxes and therefore almost never have need of applying at the carriers' window.

$100-AN-ACRE LAND.

Except where it is in demand for building-lots, the value of land per acre is wholly dependent on the quantity and quality of the products it can be made to yield, and on the facility with which these products can be marketed. It is plain, then, that the organization recently formed among northwestern farmers, under the name of "$100-anAcre Clubs," have a sound basis for their endeavor; which is to so improve the reputation of their lands, by co-operation in the raising of choice crops and choice breeds of stock, and in marketing the same, that they shall have a selling value of $100 an acre or more, instead of a meager $15 or $25 an acre, as now. Today, the owner of a 160-acre farm, with land quoted at the latter figure, is "worth" from $2,400 to $4,000. If the price is boosted to $100 an acre, he becomes worth $16,000. Certainly here is an incentive to strenuous endeavor.

That the pushing up of land values by such means is entirely feasible, even in the absence of near-by markets, is proved by numerous instances in various parts of the West, where the matching of the right fruits or vegetables or other crops to the right soil, under right management, has run up the value of the land from "government price" to not merely $100, but often to three or four times that amount, per acre. And peculiar merit attaches to this method of acquiring comparative wealth, from the contrast it offers to the method of the ordinary land speculator. The latter gets rich from the "unearned increment" in values resulting from the enterprise and industry of others. The man who puts value into land by skillful agriculture, on the contrary, builds up the fortunes of the entire community along with his own.

There is, however, another method of lifting the value of land from $15 or $25 to $100 an acre or more, which is equally beneficent in its promise and unselfish in its operation; and which is available in probably every fairly well-settled country in Minnesota. That is, by dividing the large farms, of 160 acres or more, and selling tracts of 10 to 20 acres, each with a cottage thereon, on long time, to the European farmers who are pouring into the United States in hundreds of thousands, but very few of whom can now find any chance for "a home on the land." This method would bring to this State the added population which alone is necessary to make land values here equal to those in New York, Ohio, Indiana and Illinois. The population certainly will not come so long as the only invitation given to the European farmer is substantially this: "Abandon your wife and children; come to Minnesota alone, and we wil give you work in busy seasons and let you shift for wourself as you can during the rest of the year.

Eighty acres, separated from the average farm of 160 acres and divided into half-a-dozen small holdings, would make each quarter-section the home of about 35 persons, instead of only 5 as at present. If the farmers of any county would organize themselves into a "$100-an-Acre Club," with a view to the general adoption of this plan that county would quickly become, not only one of the most populous, but one of the richest and most prosperous in Minnesota.

SOUTHERN PACIFIC LOSES MUCH LAND

Federal Judge Holds Road Has Not Lived Up to Contract.

Portland, Ore., April 25.—Federal Judge Charles E. O. Wolverton decided that the Southern Pacific and the Oregon and California Railway companies must forfeit to the United States government about 200,000 acres of land, which is valued at $40,000,000 to $75,000,000.

Interpreting the act of congress granting the land as an aid to railway construction the court held that congress intended that this land should be sold to bona fide settlers in tracts not greater than 160 acres to one individual and at a price not exceeding $2.50 an acre.

While deciding in favor of the federal government Judge Wolverton decided against the several thousand intervenors in the case. He held that they had acquired no right whatever either by settling on the land or by tendering the maximum sum per claim specified by the law.

The effect of this portion of the decision is that the lands cannot be procured by any individual until the president or congress again opens them to entry.

The sixty-seven entrymen who had gone upon the land as settlers before the suits of the government began also lost their claims and are held to have gained no advantage whatever by their period of settlement.

More than five thousand intervenors have filed applications to get a portion of the land, but their supposed rights are brushed aside, leaving the entire tract open to disposition by congress.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

Members of Congress have a hard time to find men for West Point or Annapolis who have the necessary physical and mental qualifications. They pick their candidates and in nine cases out of ten they fail when the test comes. Recently a young man wrote to Congressman Davis asking for appointment to West Point. He gave his name as Walter Eugene Richards and his place of residence as Courtland, Nicollet county, Minnesota. He stated that he was attending the New York university. After investigation Mr. Davis recommended the young man as alternate for the special examination in May. A day or so after making the recommendation the War Department advised Mr. Davis that the young man in question had been recommended for appointment by five other members of Congress. It appears that Mr. Richards was so anxious to secure the appointment that he had represented himself as an actual resident of five different states, his period of residence varying from two years to 19 years. Six members of Congress had been fooled by the young man's misrepresentations and had gone so far as to arrange for his examination. It is needless to say that the recommendations have all been withdrawn following the disclosures.

GOOD and BAD ROAD.

The great benefits to be derived from the use of the split log drag were never more strongly accentuated than on the telephone road east at the present time. Beginning at the river bridge and out as far as to the first ditch near Berggren's the road is rough, hard baked and in miserable condition; while from said ditch eastward it has been dragged and everyone passing over it remarks what a good road that is. It is worth many times the trouble. Good roads pay.

PREFFERED GOOSE FLESH.

Farmer Jenkins beleived in the good old-fashioned idea of giving all the farm hands and laborers a real good feed at the festive season. So he determined to give them something to remember last year and ordered the feast to start with soup, to be followed by goose, roast beef and unlimited supplies of plum pudding.

The farm hands duly assembled, and having fasted all day, so as to be in good trim for the Christmas feed, were prepared to make the supplies look foolish. Roast goose and beer were all they expected.

"Ere, what's this 'ere?" said a dissapointed, sturdy son of toil, when a huge plate of soup was placed before him. "You've forgotten the goose and stuffin'. I don't want all gravy!".—Judge.

LOST LOVE

I loved a gentle maiden,
A maiden fair to see,
But a hollow-chested rival
Has taken her from me.
She used to smile upon me,
She praised me for my worth;
She even thought that angels
Had blessed me at my birth.
I used to think that never
Since Eve through Eden strayed
Had been so sweet a maiden
As this entrancing maid.
But she has ceased to love me,
The maiden I loved best;
Another brings her roses
To fasten on her breast.
I had but love to promise,
She scorns my noble rage;
He knows a way to help her
To get upon the stage.

—BOOTS—

Boots go on feet; so do men. Boots have soles; so do men. Boots sometimes get tight; so do men. Boots shine when polished; so do men. A boot to get on needs a pull; so does a man. Some boots have red tops; so do some men. Some boots are imitation calf; some men are the same article. Some boots can't stand water; neither can some men. When a boot is well soaked its a bad case; so is a man. A boot to be of much account needs a mate; so does a man. A boot when heeled is comfortable; so is a man.—Modern History.

ANSTAD

Spring work is in full blast around here now.

Mrs. Fiskevold and son Edmond called at Anstad last Friday.

We are all glad to learn that Mrs. Wold is now able to be up and around again.

Miss Helga Langseth called at Lund's on her way home from school last Thursday. It seems to be the same old story in the same old way! or is it new?

Kaia, Laura and Olga Lund visited with Petrina Wiseth last Sunday.

The Wiseth family visited at Westby's last Sunday, and a very happy afternoon was spent.

Mrs. Lund was a business caller at Anstad last Tuesday, and while there she called on Miss Snider and got a new hat.

Helga Langseth visited at the Geo. Wold and Mjelde homes last Saturday. She seems to enjoy walking.

Knut Rogness left for Warren to secure a license. I wish he would let me read it, when he returns.

It has been said that Martin Westby has been suffering with a lumpjaw for some time, but we all hope he will recover soon.

Wish to announce that the city barber has moved his shop from Poplar grove Ave., to Bell Plain Ave. I hope his intentions are to be nearer where the sun rises in the morning.

I've heard that the fellow on the forty moved his yellow house. Did you get tired of the old woman, so you are looking for a new one? Vaage Mig!

Mrs. Geo. Wold and sister Albertina visited at Graff's last Sunday.

A certain young man in the vicinity of Anstad has been very busy lately burning and clearing the surroundings and unfortunately while this young man's attentions were called nearer the school house a hay stack caught fire and went up in smoke, but afterwards the remains were considered more valuable as stock food.

Mr. and Mrs. Wallin visited at Westby's last Sunday.

A pleasing sound was heard across the prairies last night. I wonder if it was a few frogs or a musician?

A very accommodating farmer from out east passed through Anstad last Saturday. He was kind enough to leave a good deal of fish at Anstad. Call again if you please.

Four young gentlemen from Anstad were to Germantown last Sunday How did you spend the time on the way boys?

School Notes

Thief River Falls was named last Saturday as one of the twenty favored high schools which will hereafter receive $2500 annually from the state to aid in maintaining departments of agriculture, manual training and domestic science. There were eighty applicants, several schools having made application at the last moment in addition to the list of sixty seven published in the daily papers. All towns were represented at the hearing at the state capitol by delegations of from one to eight men. The following schools from northwestern Minnesota appeared as applicants: Stephen, Argyle, Detroit, Roseau, Red Lake Falls, Bemidji, Warren and Thief River Falls. Only the last three from this section won out.

The Junior-Senior reception at the Lincoln last Friday evening was a delightful social event for the students and the members of the high school faculty and board of education, who accepted the invitations to be present.

Only five weeks of school remain, and parents of children who are making unsatisfactory or even bare pas-

The educators of northern Minnesota appreciate the wisdom of Representative D. P. O'Neill of this city in amending the enlarged Putnam bill in the House this winter, whereby the number of special high schools was increased from 15 to 20, thus clinchsing marks are urged to see that these pupils are permitted to attend school regularly for the remainder of the term. Passing mark is 75, but a record based on a mere passing standard is little better than a plain failure

During the warm dry weather the grade children are granted intermission morning and afternoon in lieu of the usual physical exercises.

But few schools in the state receive more state money in the form of special and regular aid and appropriations than does Thief River Falls. This accounts in part for the fact that this city has the lowest school tax rate of all the northwestern Minnesota towns and villages with but one exception. This year the state grants Thief River Falls $750 for maintaining the normal training department; $1750 regular high school aid, approximately $5,000 of state apportionment (this amount is base[illegible] the attendance of the children f[illegible] least 40 days and amounts to about $5 per capita). Next year, in adding the claims of Thief River Falls and other northern towns to places on the coveted list. Lacking this action, the upper Minnesota towns would have stood scant chance of securing the $2500 annual state aid under this act.

The kindergarten rooms are so crowded that no more beginners can be permitted to enter this term.

All the teachers for next year have been engaged with the exception of a teacher of agriculture. As soon as the list is complete it will be published.

tion to the above, it will receive $2,500 special aid under the Putnam Act, making a total of $10,000 of an actual gift to this city for its schools. It is significant that the state grants special aid most generally to those schools which exhibit an inclination to assist themselves.

Pennington and Red Lake county friends of Mrs. O'Brien, teacher in the Central school, will be pleased to learn that she has been elected principal of the semi-graded school at Big Fork, Koochiching county, at a salary of $80 per month.

WHEN THEY MET AGAIN

By R. PEMBERTON SLADE

Copyright by American Press Association, 1911.

Mildred and I were about the same age. We were twenty. I was very much in love with her, but I hadn't a cent in the world, nor had she. A girl at that age is far more developed than a man of the same years. She seems to advance quicker, but not so far as the man. I know there are women nowadays who will not admit this, but I am not going to stop in my story to argue the point. At all events, when Mildred and I were twenty I was still a boy building castles in the air, while she was looking at her and my present and future status in a rationalistic way.

I was going out to China to engage in business and to live there indefinitely. I was to take a clerkship at the bottom of the ladder, and I had not heard that promotion was very rapid. I was unreasonable enough to urge Mildred to engage herself to me. Of course she declined, but not for any reason except that she considered that an engagement between us under the circumstances would be unjust to both.

"Very well," I said. "Do not consider yourself bound to me, nor will I consider myself bound to you, but so sure as the world turns on its axis I will return, and if you are free and willing I will marry you."

So we parted. I went to China determined to attend strictly to the work of advancing myself so that I might return for my love. I wrote her occasionally and received replies to my letters. I was bent on keeping my promise and strained every nerve to achieve the wherewithal to enable me to do it. But the luck was against me. I had been with a firm five years when they failed and went out of business. I found a position with another concern, with which I spent another five years. I was just about to be admitted to the firm as a junior partner when the head of the house died. His widow insisted on the business being wound up that she might get her capital out of it and go home to America. This threw me out again. By this time I had acquired a little capital, and, putting it with that of another man, we went into business together. Within a year we lost all the capital of both by speculation. I started in again with borrowed money and in ten years found myself with a fortune.

I was now forty-two years old, and Mildred was the same age. For the last ten years I had heard very little from her, but knew that she had not been married. I suppose it was pride or obstinacy, or both, that induced me to go back to America for her. Of course an absence of twenty-two years from a woman one loves—or has loved—must make quite a difference in his feelings for her. It occurred to me, however, that when we came together we would go on from where we left off. I wrote reminding her that I had told her when I separated from her that I would surely some day come back to marry her and I was now about to do so.

I received a reply to my letter the day I sailed. Mildred confessed that she had been waiting for me all these years, since she had believed I was just the man to do what I had said I would do. "Fortunately," she said, "all my friends tell me that I look ten or a dozen years younger than women of my age, and there is hope that my personal appearance won't shock you."

I confess I was greatly agitated when I called on Mildred, sent up my card and waited for her to receive me. When she came in she was naturally embarrassed. As for me, I was surprised, for she did not look more than twenty-eight. While she might well have changed so much that I would not know her, I saw her just as I remembered her, though a few years older, and yet not old enough to take her beyond the pale of young ladyhood.

After a separation of more than two decades beginning just where we left off was impossible. I found that I must win my love again—not that I felt any anxiety as to how my courtship would result, but that we were both changed. I knew very well that Mildred would not have known me had she not expected me. And as for her, though she was not so changed in appearance as I, there was in her those other changes that come over us so imperceptibly that one's friends do not notice them unless they are separated from us for long periods. One change in her was more marked than any other. I had left her an extremely matter of fact woman. Increased years seemed to have developed a certain ideality that I had not noticed when she was younger. But I am inclined to think that every trait there is in us is developed as we grow older.

In a month we were married, since I must get back to my business. The ceremony was over when my wife introduced a lady as her older sister. I was much disconcerted.

"I remember your younger sister Florie, about six years old when I left America. I never heard of an older one."

"I am Mildred," said the older.

"And I am Florie," said the younger.

I stood mute, looking from the one to the other. I can't say that any one defined feeling prevailed. They neutralized one another.

"I am too old for you now," said Mildred, "but you are too good a man to be lost to the family. I have engineered all this. Florie helped me."

A CONVINCING ARGUMENT

By ELIZABETH WEED

Copyright by American Press Association, 1911.

Walter Dixon was graduated with the highest honors and, having shown remarkable promise in a literary way, was sent abroad to study the literature of different countries, then given the chair of that department in his alma mater. But Walter was a delicate fellow, and his physicians told him that if he cared to remain on earth he would better find some occupation to take him out of doors. Walter took the hint and set himself up for an advertising broker.

One morning he stepped into the store of John Hobson & Co., importers of foreign fruits, etc., presented his card to the senior member of the firm and asked for patronage.

"Young man," said Mr. Hobson, who was uneducated, "I'm agin advertising. There's so many advertisements that there isn't anybody reads 'em."

"If people didn't read them, Mr. Hobson, the periodicals and newspapers would have to close up."

"I say people don't read 'em, and that's all there is about it. I'm busy; get out o' here."

"I see, Mr. Hobson, that I can't do any business with you without first proving to you the value of what I have to sell. I will give you an advertisement free for that purpose. Kindly mention the name of some article you have for sale."

"Oh, take our preserved ginger and let me alone. I've more important work on hand than staving off solicitors."

Several days later Mr. Hobson noticed that his mail was much larger than usual. The first letter he opened contained an advertisement cut from a newspaper of Hobson's prepared ginger. Mr. Hobson first read the letter inclosing it:

> Dear Sir—I would call your attention to the fact that ginger does not grow on trees, especially in northern climates. It is a root and is indigenous to tropical countries. Yours respectfully,
> MARIA L. WILBUR,
> Principal of the High School.

Mr. Hobson glanced at the ad. with surprise and vexation. It read as follows:

> Our ginger is growed especially for us in Norway, picked from the trees and cured on the spot. There ain't no ingredients in it that would hurt a baby. It's all carefully peeled and put to soak in vinegar, after which it's boiled in lemon juice and put into jars. In this way we git a flavor that there ain't no discount on.

Mr. Hobson colored and his eye fired. He opened another letter:

> Dear Sir—I have read your ad, and beg leave to call your attention to the fact that there is no "peel" on ginger. Yours truly, MARGARET ASHLEY,
> Of the Blakely Cooking School

Other letters were as follows:

> That ad. of yours is a corker. I don't know anything about ginger, whether it is from a Norway or a South American tree; but, having a thorough knowledge of the English language, I should like to write your ads. for you.

> In the inclosed advertisement you have used the word "growed" incorrectly. It should be "grown."

> This ad. is ridiculous. You might as well try to get walrus fat out of the Caribbean sea as to try for ginger in Norway.

Mr. Hobson had opened and thrown into the wastebasket a hundred letters from lawyers, doctors, housewives, merchants—indeed, all sorts of persons—and was about to get at his daily work when the postman came in and unloaded another bundle. And such was the case whenever a batch of mail was delivered. Mr. Hobson was obliged to open the letters lest he should throw into the wastebasket something of importance. The next day there were but two or three comments on the ad. and the day following none.

On the third day Dixon appeared. Mr. Hobson faced him and said:

"What do you mean by disgracing my business by putting in that ad. about my preserved ginger? Only an ignoramus would have said what you did."

"The question is not as to the writing of the ad. I don't pretend to know anything about ginger. I wished to prove to you that ads. are read."

"Young man, I'm convinced that people do read ads. But I'd like to know where you got your learning."

"I'm a college graduate."

"Well, all I've got to say is that they'd better burn down the college where you graduated. A college graduate as don't know any more than you about ginger and how to write common language had better put his head to soak."

"If you are convinced that advertisements are generally read and will give me an order you can write the next ad. yourself."

"You bet I'll write it myself. I don't want no more such wrong information and bad writin' about my goods. Set down there a few minutes and I'll talk to you."

Dixon "set" awhile, but it paid him. He left the store with a thousand dollar order for advertisements. And Hobson was convinced from the sudden dropping off of the letters he had received about the test ad. that advertisements must be repeated to be of value. The order was continuous.

The business thus gained proved the foundation for a large clientele that was very profitable to Dixon. Constantly out in the air he grew rugged and well to do at the same time. The ingenuity he displayed in getting Hobson & Co.'s business was developed in other directions, so that it was not long before he had all he could attend to. Finally, having established his health he gave up his calling and resumed his chair at the university.

Diana of Philadelphia.

At the mint in Philadelphia are a number of coins far more precious than any which find their way into circulation. They are a collection of curios, and many of them date from times of great antiquity. Perhaps the most interesting among them is a handsome coin bearing on its face the profile of a woman which has a striking resemblance to the goddess of Liberty of our own currency. Underneath is the single word "Demos," which is the Greek for people. On the reverse of the coin is a beautiful figure of the goddess Diana arching her bow, and the inscription translated into English reads, "Diana, Friend of the Philadelphians."

The coin was minted more than 2,000 years ago at the city of Philadelphia, in Asia Minor, where there grew up in later years one of the seven churches of which St. John writes. The prize was discovered some years ago in Europe by a citizen of our own Philadelphia, himself an authority on coins. By him it was appropriately presented to the mint in Philadelphia. —New York Press.

Carlyle's Sneer at Gladstone.

J. E. Boehm, the sculptor, once met Gladstone at a country house and was immensely impressed by the extent and diversity of the statesman's knowledge as revealed in his conversation. Boehm was still full of the subject when the morning arrived for Carlyle's sitting for a bust, and to the philosopher the sculptor poured forth his admiration for Gladstone's intimate acquaintance with subjects so far apart as gardening and Greek. Carlyle listened for a time in scornful silence; then he said, "And what did he say about your work?" "Oh, nothing," said Boehm. "He doesn't know anything about sculpture." "Of course," growled Carlyle, "of course, and he showed his knowledge about things that you didn't understand. No doubt if you asked Blackie he'd say that Gladstone knew nothing about Greek, and the gardener would tell you that he knew nothing whatever of gardening."

How Sheridan Paid a Debt

No one knew better the power possessed by a really polished compliment than Sheridan, and on innumerable occasions during that rather stormy theatrical management of his did he extricate himself from a difficulty by means of one. A good instance is the following: An English nobleman who had married a beautiful actress once applied with much dignity in the greenroom to Mr. Sheridan for the arrears of her salary and vowed that he would not stir till they were paid.

"My dear lord," said the impecunious manager, "this is too bad. You have taken from us the brightest jewel in the world, and you now quarrel with us for the little dust she has left behind her."

The nobleman immediately burst out laughing, and the debt was canceled.—London Standard.

Graveyard Marriages.

A strange custom prevails among a certain tribe in the Caucasus. When a single young man dies some one calls upon a bereaved parent who has carried to the grave a marriageable daughter in the course of a year and says: "Your son is sure to want a wife. I'll give you my daughter, and you shall deliver to me the marriage portion in return." A friendly offer of this description is never rejected, and the two parties soon come to terms as to the amount of the dowry, which varies according to the advantages possessed by the girl in her lifetime. Cases have been known where the young man's father has given as much as thirty cows to secure a dead wife for his dead son.

Nature's Scene Shifting.

Although in the geological past vast changes of level occurred on the borders and even in the center of continents, it is a debated question whether at present similar elevations and subsidences can be detected. Recently the frequently repeated statement that the coasts of Massachusetts and New Jersey are perceptibly sinking has been disputed, the apparent subsidence being ascribed to simple changes of shore line. But some curious records kept in Europe seem to indicate that actual fluctuations of the level of the land may occasionally be observed. In the valley of the Main a church tower hidden behind a mountain screen has since 1861 gradually risen into plain view from the chateau of Strossendorf, and still farther in the same direction another church tower, which began to be visible from Strossendorf eighty years ago, is now clearly seen above the horizon and is said to rise higher as time goes on. Similar records exist in Bohemia, in Switzerland, in Spain and in the French Jura.

HOUSE APPROVES CANADIAN PACT

Passes Measure by the Overwhelming Vote of 265 to 89.

REJECTS ALL AMENDMENTS

Agreement Goes Through in Almost Identical Form in Which It Passed Last House.

Washington, April 22.—President Taft's Canadian reciprocity agreement, supported by all but a handful of Democrats and opposed by a majority of the Republicans, passed the house of representatives by a vote of 265 to 89. With nearly two hundred Democrats in control and their action endorsed by a large body of the Republicans the bill to put the agreement in force was adopted with no amendments and in almost identically the form in which it passed the house in the last session of the preceding congress.

The bill seeks to put into effect the formal agreement reached between President Taft and members of the Canadian cabinet for a reduction of tariff rates on many articles and free trade in many others across the Canadian border. Added to it by the Democratic leaders is a section which "authorizes and requests" President Taft to make further efforts to secure still freer trade relations with Canada in the form of additional reciprocal relations.

All Amendments Rejected.

The passage of the bill marked the close of a fight that had raged in the house for six days. During that time the safety of the measure was at no time threatened; but the Democratic and Republican leaders working for its passage conceded all the opportunity desired by its opponents for debate and protest against it. Following the same policy amendments were admitted in the house for almost every section of the bill and in each case they were rejected by an overwhelming vote given by the friends of the measure on both sides of the house on the theory that any amendment would nullify it.

Ten Democrats voted against the bill on its passage, while 197 Democrats voted for it. As in the case when the bill passed at the preceding session of congress a majority of the Republicans were found against it, the party vote being 67 for and 78 opposed. Representative Berger of Wisconsin, the Socialist member, voted for it and Representative Aiken of New York, who ranks as independent, voted against it.

NORTHWESTERN MEN'S PART

Nearly All Cast Their Votes Against Agreement.

Washington, April 22.—Representative Hammond of Minnesota was one of the eleven Democrats who voted against the Canadian reciprocity agreement in the house. The Minnesotan resisted all the demands made upon him by the Democratic leaders to stand in line for the bill reported favorably by the committee on ways and means, of which he is a member.

Representatives Davis, Volstead, Steenerson and Lindbergh voted against the Canadian bill, as they did in the last congress. Representatives Stevens, Miller and Nye, consistent with the record they made on the subject a few months ago, voted for Canadian reciprocity.

Representative Sydney Anderson of the First district, the raw recruit in the delegation, voted against the agreement.

Reciprocity Bill in Senate.

Washington, April 25.—The Canadian reciprocity bill was conveyed from the house to the senate and without comment was referred to the committee on finance. It cannot be taken up until the organization of the committee is completed.

Seven Killed in Explosion.

St. Louis, April 24.—Four persons, two men and two women, died in a hospital, making seven deaths in all resulting from an explosion of a tank of gasoline. Six others are seriously burned. Of the dead, six resided near where the tank car was standing. Four of them are of one family and a boy of the family, who is the only living member, may lose both of his hands.

MRS. SCOTT AGAIN CHOSEN

Re-Elected President General of Daughters of Revolution.

Washington, April 22.—Mrs. Matthew T. Scott of Illinois was declared re-elected president general of the Daughters of the American Revolution for the next two years. Of the 1,086 votes cast Mrs. Scott received 614, her opponent, Mrs. William C. Story of New York, 466 and six of the ballots were blank as to choice for president general. Tellers spent almost twenty-four hours in counting the vote.

With Mrs. Scott was elected the entire administration ticket, except one vice president general, who received ten votes less than the number necessary to elect, and for which position a new ballot will be taken.

TIME OF ARMISTICE WILL BE EXTENDED

Five Days [illegible] Parties [illegible] to End War.

Washington, April 25.—Dr. Vasquez Gomez, head of the confidential agency of the Mexican revolutionists here, received plenary powers from Francisco I. Madero, Jr., the rebel leader, to ratify the armistice arrangement entered into by the latter with General Navarro of the federal forces at Juarez, Mex.

Dr. Gomez officially notified the Mexican government of the consummation of the armistice and exchanged messages with Mexico City to get an extension of the five-day period of the armistice. Dr. Gomez pointed out that as he had been summoned by General Madero to Juarez to participate in the peace negotiations it would be impossible for him to get to that point until after the present armistice agreement will have expired. It is not believed that any difficulty will be encountered on this point.

Ford, assistant district attorney of Los Angeles and Frank Fox, chauffeur, were arrested on affidavits charging them with having kidnapped J. J. The men were arrested on warrants issued in the court of Justice of the Peace Manning after affidavits against them had been made by an attorney for McNamara.

MARTIAL LAW AT MUSCATINE

Streets Deserted and Places of Amusement Closed.

Muscatine, Ia., April 25.—Muscatine experienced the most quiet night in its history. At 8 o'clock, pursuant to the military orders, the streets were deserted. All places of amusement were closed and the downtown streets were almost in darkness. Announcement has been made at headquarters that Company B of Davenport and Company M of Fairfield will be ordered here and the local company will be relieved.

SCORE OF PEOPLE KILLED

Passenger Train Plunges Down Gorge in South Africa.

Cape Town, April 23.—A passenger train on the Kooeira railroad plunged to destruction in a rocky gorge 250 feet deep through the collapse of the Blaaukrantz bridge, thirteen miles from Grahamstown.

Twenty-one passengers were carried down with the coaches and killed.

Their bodies were torn to pieces and inextricably mixed with the debris of the cars which were ground to splinters.

TWENTY-TWO MEN ENTOMBED IN MINE

Little Hope of Rescue of Workers in West Virginia Pit.

Elk Garden, W. Va., April 25.—Twenty-two miners are entombed in Ott mine No. 2 of the Davis Coal and Coke company here, the result of an explosion, and little chance is held out for the rescue of any of them alive, because of the tons of debris that have thus far impeded the progress of the rescuers. It cannot be learned yet whether the explosion was caused by dust or gas. Officials of the company say they never have known their mines to be gaseous.

As soon as the accident became known Superintendent Robert Grant organized a rescue corps of the miners off duty.

The party had not advanced far into the workings before it discovered it would take several days to dig through the heaps of roof coal and slate that had been loosened by the explosion. It then was decided to effect an entrance near the probable point of the explosion by cutting through the wall of an adjoining mine owned by the same company.

In striking contrast to the usual mine explosions the victims in this case, with one exception, are Americans.

UNION LEADER UNDER ARREST

Charged With Complicity in Los Angeles Explosion.

HUSTLED OUT OF INDIANA

Accused Man Denied Permission by the Officials to Consult Friends or Attorneys.

Chicago, April 22.—John J. McNamara, secretary and treasurer of the International Association of Bridge and Structural Iron Workers, was arrested at Indianapolis today on the charge of having engineered the dynamiting of the Los Angeles Times building last fall.

At almost the same moment that McNamara was arrested in his Indianapolis office a party slipped out of Chicago on a special train bound for Los Angeles, bearing with them the secrets of the long and disastrous war against the open shop. One of the prisoners in the party that left Chicago was the mysterious "J. B. Bryce," to whom the dynamiting of the Times building has been traced and who has been held responsible by a grand jury for the murder of the twenty-one persons who perished in the explosion. He proved to be none other than James McNamara, brother of the labor official.

The other prisoner was a Chicago man, Ortie E. McManigal, who is a member of local No. 5 of the Iron Workers' Chicago branch. Both men were arrested on April 12 in Detroit, where they were alleged to be preparing to destroy the new $2,000,000 railroad terminal there.

Their Arrest Suppressed.

That John J. McNamara, who is declared to be the brains of the open shop war, might be taken into custody at the proper moment their arrest was suppressed. They were tricked into allowing themselves to be taken to Chicago from Detroit without legal resistance and since then have been held here. On the way from Detroit, the detectives assert, McNamara attempted to win freedom by bribery. He is said to have offered first $20,000 and then $30,000 to be allowed to slip off the train with his companion.

Following the arrest of Secretary McNamara in Indianapolis dynamite was found in the basement of the building occupied by the union and also in a barn rented by McNamara.

The arrests marked the end of one of the most thrilling hunts ever recorded. Many times detectives knew in advance that certain explosions were to take place and did not dare to prevent them lest they warn the quarry of their presence. For six months, during which time more than a dozen bomb outrages have been staged by the "wrecking crew," its members have never been out of sight of a detective.

William J. Burns, head of the Burns detective agency and the man who exposed the San Francisco graft ring, is responsible for the arrests.

Given No Chance for Defense.

McNamara's arrest was well planned and startlingly carried out, in a manner strange in American legal procedure. He was rushed to police court, where Police Judge Collins, Mayor Shank and other officials, advised in advance were waiting. McNamara seemed almost dazed. Arraigned immediately he was asked how he pleaded. He seemed not to be able to grasp what was going on.

"I protest," he shouted. "This is an outrage," but he got no further. A plea of not guilty was entered for him and Judge Collins remanded him into Burns' custody. He had no time to consult friends or attorneys, but was rushed to the train.

Edgar A. Perkins, former president of the State Federation of Labor and now president of the local Typographical union, expressed the resentment felt in labor circles here when he said:

"This high handed outrage would not even be permitted in 'Darkest Russia.' Investigations have proved that the explosion was caused by gas and not by dynamite. Those of us who know McNamara—and he numbers his friends by the thousands—know he is innocent. His innocence will be proven. He will come out all right and the labor unions will stand by him in his fight."

AN OUTRAGE, SAYS GOMPERS

Attributes Arrest of McNamara to Enemies of Labor.

Washington, April 24.—President Gompers of the American Federation of Labor declared the arrest of International Secretary John J. McNamara, of the Bridge and Structural Iron Workers of America at Indianapolis was a grossly outrageous kidnapping and attributed the arrest to enemies of organized labor and a plot of money interests to destroy union labor. He suggested that the states, in their exercise of their police powers, are as foreign to each other as are foreign countries and no country would think of giving up a citizen on mere demand of another country without a hearing.

Ocean Derelicts.

There is an old dread of encountering a derelict that is just below the surface of the water. There is no such danger. A derelict that will sink below the surface will sink to the bottom. Take a tub of water and try to find any object that will unattached occupy a position that is other than at the surface or at the bottom. There is a long task ahead of you. There is the false theory that the water grows denser as one goes deeper and that a sinking object will find a place where it will remain suspended. This theory is not correct, and a boat that will sink beneath the surface will sink to the bottom, even if that bottom should be twenty miles down. The derelict that is bumped into has a piece of itself sticking out of the water as an alarm if the eyes of the lookout are only sharp enough to catch it.—New York Tribune.

As It Really Was.

OFFICERS WILL EXAMINE BOOKS

Indianapolis Judge Limits Scrutiny of Union Records.

BARS PRIVATE DETECTIVES

Only County Prosecutor, Members of Grand Jury and Iron Workers' Officials Will Be Allowed to Inspect the Books and Papers Taken In Raid on the Headquarters of the Union. Dynamite Find to Be Thoroughly Probed.

Indianapolis, April 25.—By an order of Judge Joseph T. Markey of the Marion county criminal court only the county prosecutor, the members of the grand jury and the officials of the International Association of Bridge and Structural Iron Workers will be permitted to examine books and papers taken by the police and deputy sheriffs from the offices of the association.

This action, taken on application of attorneys for the association and with the approval of the county prosecutor, bars private detectives and unofficial investigators from inspecting the books, correspondence and documents.

The material was locked up in the grand jury room and will be submitted to the grand jury in the course of the investigation in progress as to the identity of persons that deposited a quantity of dynamite in the iron workers' association storage compartment in the basement of the building in which are its offices.

A part of the books and papers were seized by the police last Saturday night in a raid on the offices led by William J. Burns, a private detective in the employ of the National Erectors' association investigating the responsibility of dynamite explosions that have damaged bridges and buildings in course of construction in many parts of the country and destroyed the Los Angeles Times building, with great loss of life.

Raid Followed Arrest.

The raid followed the arrest of J. J. McNamara, secretary treasurer of the Bridge and Structural Iron Workers, indicted in Los Angeles for complicity in an explosion of the Llewellyn Iron works.

Superintendent of Police Hyland was summoned with these books and papers before the grand jury, and afterward a summons was issued for Frank M. Ryan, president of the iron workers' association, ordering him to produce certain other records. Ryan did not do so and by order of the grand jury deputy sheriffs went to the office building with a wagon, piled the desired documents in it and took them to the courthouse. It was announced that the grand jury at this time did not care to examine Ryan as a witness.

The books and papers demanded by the grand jury were stacked indiscriminately about the four packages of dynamite fuses, explosive caps and alarm clocks discovered by the police in Saturday night's raid. The explosives were removed to a secret place by the authorities and the other material was guarded by the police and by deputy sheriffs until it was taken out.

INQUIRY WILL BE THOROUGH

Grand Jury to Probe Into the Dynamite Find.

Indianapolis, April 25.—Frank P. Baker, county prosecutor, announced that the grand jury's investigation will go into intimations that there was a conspiracy against the iron workers' association and its officials resulting in the "planting" of the dynamite, to create evidence against them, in their office building. These allegations were contained in statements attributed to the union officials.

Mr. Baker said also the grand jury would probe the charges that the dynamite was collected here with the intention of using it to destroy buildings being erected by contractors employing nonunion iron workers.

CREATE CONFUSION IN ROUTE

Detectives Pursuing Zigzag Course With Prisoners.

Los Angeles, Cal., April 25.—Creating confusion in order to protect the secret of the date and hour when John and James McNamara and Ortie McManigal will arrive to face the charge of having destroyed the Times plant has been for two days the principal occupation of the officials who will be charged with the safekeeping of the alleged conspirators.

That they are coming across the continent by zigzag routes is, however, asserted on all sides. Chief of Police Sebastian said he believed the prisoners and their guards would not arrive for two weeks.

CO-OPERATIVE BREEDING ASSOCIATION

To get a sire that will make improvement in his heifers over the common cow, it is generally necessary to go outside the neighborhood. Unfrtunately pure bred dairy herds are scarce. The cost of a pure bred sire is generally from $75 to $100, a price that the average frontier farmer feels that he cannot afford to pay. By eight or ten farmers clubbing together the amount for each one to pay would not be as much as the cost of a scrub animal, and one sire will do for eight or ten of the average herds as well as one.

To carry this co-operatin still further and to secure the greatest improvement at the least expense, it is planned for all the farmers of the township to co-operate and buy 4 or 5 sires of the same breed, but unrelated. Have one sire for every ten herds, and exchange from one community of herds to another every two years so that inbreeding would not be practiced. In this way the sires could be kept for eight or ten years. As it is now the sire is often disposed of at 3 or 4 years of age which is only at the beginning of his greatest usefulness, and power of transmission. The best heifers are frpm the mature sires.

This plan of breeding has already been adopted by one community of farmers in Northern Minnesota the farmers of the Meadow Co-operative Creamery association of Berner, Clear water county.

They bought five pure bred sires in co-operation under the plan previously outlined. Within a few years that farming community will be noted for the breed of cattle they have selected. They are noted now for being the first association of farmers in the state to take up this plan of co-operative cattle breeding. It is further worthy of note that this association of farmers live in a back woods section. Twenty-five miles from a railroad station. Their local creamery is their market, and when they haul a load from there to the railway, over their long road, it is a ton of butter, worth today some $600.

Dairying is the industry for the great majority of farmers of Northern Minnesota and we should all pursue this wise policy of improving our common cows.

The Experiment Farm is in position to assist the farmers in securing breeding stock. We are in co-operation with several breeders in this section of the state and we have a large number of animals to select from aside from the Experiment Farm herd.

The plan is for the Experiment Farm to co-operate with every farmers' association and every farmer who buys a breeding animal, and to act as a medium price to farmers who cannot afford a pure bred animal, and where a co-operative association can not be formed. Where there is a co-operative creamery there should be a co-operative breeders' association.

Where the co-operative creamery does not exist, a co-operative breeding association would be the best movement that could be made toward the creamery.

Co-operation is the most potent factor toward industrial and business success in the world today. It is just as important in farming as it is in any other industry. The co-operative creamery is the very foundation of successful dairying. A co-operative breeding association that requires only from $150 from every ten farmers will prove the greatest factor toward making the successful creamery.

If you are interested in securing breeding stock write to the Experiment Farm, Grand Rapids, Minn.

VOL. XXII, THIEF RIVER FALLS, MINNESOTA, FRIDAY, MAY 5, 1911 NO 37

MINNESOTA HISTORICAL SOCIETY.

AMERICAN CIVIC ASSOCIATION

Headqarters at Washington D.C. Purpose and Work of Association.

Washington, D. C., May 4, 1911.—In the opinion of the American Civic Association, whose headquarters are in Washington, the "swat-the-fly" campaign and hte "clean-up" movement are of greater importance to the average American citizen,—at least so far as affecting his health and happiness,—than is the much discussed question of Canadian reciprocity, for instance, or the direct election of Senators or the trust problem. This organization deals primarily with "near-at-hand" problems,—the back yard and alley, the improvement of a river front, the supply of clean and wholesome food products and many other kindred subjects which are vital factors in the life and welfare of the average American town and city. At association headquarters they tell you that Minnesota is well to the front in the movement which has for its object the making of "a better and more beautiful America."

The purpose of the association is "the cultivation of higher ideals of civic life and beauty in America, the promotion of city, town and neighborhood improvement, and the advancement of outdoor art." It was organized about seven years ago, as the result of the merging of two organizations, the American Park and Outdoor Art Association and the American League for Civic Improvement. It now numbers about 3,000 members and is affiliated with 600 or more town and city organizations. The small fee charged for membership entitles the local league to the valuable advice of the association's experts in matters relating to civic work, from "swatting the fly" to improving a river front. The national association is a clearing house for the best and most practical literature dealing with these questions.

• • •

Many town organizations have used to great advantage the photo slides showing what other towns and cities have accomplished in the way of bringing about needed local improvements. Sometimes a mass meeting is held. When the local organization is affected. Interest in the movement is greatly helped through the use of the slides. The association's collection consists of over 1,000 different improvement subjects, including parks and public reservations, arts and crafts, gardens, public nuisances, etc. In fact, every phase of local and town improvement is touched upon. These slides are rented for five cents each, plus transportation charges both ways. If less than 20 slides are rented the charge is $1.00. The Civic Committee of the St. Peter Woman's Literary club recently joined the American Civic Association and at the same time requested the slides. Arrangements have been made to supply the St. Peter League with a consignment of slides illustrating improvement of back yard, children's gardens, trimming of trees, care of trees, improvement of river front and other civic topics. The interest children take in this work is remarkable. It has been found that in this way they are trained for useful citizenship. The city of Mankato has a junior league whose work has been attracting wide attention. The American Association encourages just this kind of activity and tries to give direction, as well as assistance, to the work of juniors whenever opportunity offers.

It will be remembered that Mrs. Caroline Bartlett Crane,—who, by the way is a member of the executive board of the association,— visited seventeen Minnesota cities and towns last fall. Following her investigation there was great interest in civic improvement enterprises, as indicated by the scores of letters received here. The association has been in correspondence with a number of Minnesota organizations concerning local work, including those in Winona, Crookston, Windom, Eveleth, Red Wing, Mankato, St. Peter(as well as other places. Local clubs in St. Peter, Austin and Mankato, as well as several in Minneapolis St. Paul and Duluth are at present affiliated with the association. Individual memberships have been taken out in New Ulm, St. Cloud, Albert Lea, Montivideo, Duluth, Minneapolis, St. Paul and Mankato. The Woman's Civic Committee of the literary club of St. Peter is the most recent addition to its membership.

In Red Wing civic improvement has gone forward by leaps and bounds the last few years. Its en-

FACTORY WILL BE OPENED

Sash and Door Factory has Changed Hands. Now amply Financed. Start in Month

The Sash and Door factory has been bought by C. O. G. Johnson and E. B. Charleson of Moorhead and L. G. Skjalde of Fargo, and it is understood that the factory will be put in ship shape and started in a month if the required power can be hed.

These men came highly spoken of by such as have known them for 25 years. They are also men of considerable means, making the financial backing of the institution ample and assured so that it may go ahead and develop naturally to fill its place, untrammeled by pecuniary embaressments.

This factory will employ at least 10 or 12 men and will be a welcome addition to the working forces of Thief River Falls at this time. "Every little helps," and it may, in time, develop into a great industry employing men by the score or even hundreds.

We understand the new firm has asked for free power from the city for two years as a bonus, and if there is any way of furnishing the additional power they will probably get it.

This is an encouraging move in the right direction and we trust it is but the forerunner of many more manufacturing industries to come to this city in the more immediate future.

With the railway distributing facilities that this city now enjoys there is good reason to look forward to the location here of many manufacturing establishments.

Factory Growing

The cigar factory on First Street east operated by Fred C. Niclai is constantly growing. It has assuming proportions now where it must be recognized as a factor in the employment of labor in our city. Mr. Niclai says he has six employed at the present time and has another coming in a few days. He expects to have ten in the near future and a girl for banding. All this enlargement because of the popularity of his new brand, "LaLunda."

TABOR FARMER IS COMMITTED

Frank Sherack Was Adjudged Insane. Committed to Asylum At Fergus Falls.

Frank Sherack, the Tabor farmer day for insanity, was adjudged insane examined in probate court yesterand was committed to the insane hospital at Fergus Falls, Sheriff Daniels and Deputy Ed Kelly taking him down on number eight last evening. The case is a particular sad one, owing to the fact that Sherack is an exceptionally bright man when sane and the periods of insanity are usually several months apart. He realizes his condition, however, and admitted to the sheriff last evening that he knew he was mentally irresponsible at times.

His mania is the appearance of spirits in the air, who tell him to do most unaccountable things, such as burning the clothing of the family, selling off his property, and giving away his stock, and deserting his family. About a year ago he had such a vision and proceeded to get rid of all his property immediately after seeding, when he had all his crop in. He realized several hundred dollars from the sale and deposited it in the name of his brother in a bank in a neighboring town, and disappeared, leaving his wife and family in poor circumstances. At that time his wife made complaint to the probate judge and had herself made guardian for him. In November he returned and seemed to be entirely well. The guardian was dismissed and the family went to live on a farm near Thief River Falls.

Mr. Sherack appeared perfectly normal until about five weeks ago, when his wife and the children went to the home of her parents at his suggestion to visit for a couple of days. Returning, she found her husband burning the clothing of the family, as well as all the family photographs, and trying to give away or otherwise dispose of all the personal property about the place.

He again disappeared, but wrote his wife at the home of her parents in Tabor a few days ago that he was working there. At her instigation he was arrested and examined yesterday, his wife being made guardian of the property and of the five children of the family. Mrs. Sherack will reside at the home of her father, J. J. Sirek, for the present.

FIGHT OVER MEEHAN ESTATE

Jas. Meehan, Cut Off From Will Demands 10,000. Hearing At Crookston.

Last evening Judge of Probate perrault, of Red Lake County, moved his court from Red Lake Falls to this city in order to secure the services of District Court Reporter Charles Lohn for the hearing on claims in the estate of the late Patrick Meehan, of Milwaukee, who died leaving an estate worth close to $100,000 in addition to an equal sum invested in mining stock, the value of which is problematical.

There is going to be a fight to the finish over the estate. His will made John Meehan, a nephew, whom he adopted, his principal heir, though a number of other nephews and nieces and his brothers were remembered.

James Meehan, another nephew, who formerly resided at Thief River Falls, however, through his attorney, Greeley E. Carr, of Minneapolis, has presented a claim for $10,000, for services rendered his uncle during the past ten years for having looked after property interests at Thief River Falls, consisting of a big business block, a sawmill and other property.

Attorney John Maher, of Milwaukee and Judge E. M. Stanton, of Thief River Falls, appeared here for the estate and the fight was on. There will be no further developments now until Judge Perrault rules on the allowance of claim, when the controcersy will be threshed out in the district court.

The Meehan family is prominent at Thief River Falls and Milwaukee. It was believed that the estate was worth over a million, but it is stated that unfortunate investments diminished it materially within the past few years.

His First Offense.

It was the first time that a Red Lake County Judge ever held conrt in Crookston, and Judge Perrault certainly demonstrated that when it comes to dignity no judge in the state has anything on him in that line. He wears the robes of justice with a grace that would do credit to judge Ried, who is presiding at the Deitz murder trial. Judge Perrault is certainly there when it comes to preserving the dignity of the court. He doesn't say much, but no attorney would forget for a minute who it whs presiding.—Crookston Times.

House Burns

The farm house of Otto Geske in Town of Silverton on section 36 was destroyed by fire last week. The loss was partly covered by insurance in the Bray Mutual Fire Insurance Co., which has already adjusted the claim.

Mr. Geske came home from his farm work at noon and started a fire in the stove by which to prepare his dinner. Then he went to the stable and did some chores and while he was gone some sparks, evidently, had shot out of the stove and fired the house. It had gained such headway before discovered that all Mr. Geske could save was his trunk.

Moran-Provencher

Last Monday morning at nine o'clock at St. Bernard's Catholic church in this city was solemnized the marriage of Miss Melina Moran and Mr. Julien Provencher, Rev. Fr. Adolph performing the marriage ceremony.

The bride was most becomingly gowned in white voile. Miss Gertrude O'Neill was bridesmaid while Will Provencher officiated as best man.

The principal toast at the wedding dinner was given by Rev. R. K. Callaway who gave as his initial thot that of international peace. Rev. Callaway had just returned from a trip to England and was filled to the brim with enthusiasm for universal brotherhood and international peace, especially so with respect to the relations between the States and England. This was a very fitting toast in a country where all nationalities blend.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Provencher have hosts of friends in the city who wish them lifelong happiness. The bride has made this city her home since childhood and for years been the trusted employee of the local telephone company while the groom, tho a newer resident, has made many friends as host of the Evelyn Hotel.

While the employees of the Evelyn and friends of the bride and groom were celebrating the happy event in the hotel dining room the happy couple with the aid of a waiting auto mobile, caught the three fifty for the cities and will spend the next couple of weeks with friends there and at Milwaukee.

Vacation Trip

Mr. and Mrs. Lars Matson, who live at 518 Conley Ave., south, have let their house to other parties and in company with their daughter, Ruth, will take an extended vacation trip to visit with children and relatives, who are thoroughly scattered over the West according to American fashion. First they go to Fargo, N. Dak., where they will visit for some time and then to Rothsey, Minn., where they will spend several months. They will also visit friends in Nebraska and will visit their childhood homes in Sweeden before returning. They do not expect to be back in our midst for a year. All their friends wish them a most pleasant vacation and enjoyable trips.

Good Road to Grygla

A. M. Arpin is laying some practical plans to rush completion of the work on the grades so situated as to put an absolute grade from here to Grygla in condition for travel by June first.

This will be a great boost for the country stretching out for a distance of fifty miles to the northeast of here. In the past all the settlers that lived twenty-five or more miles out in this direction have been forced to haul all their provisions and all their products in the winter time in order to be able to cross some of the then undrained lands without being mired. In the future this will not be necessary. After June first there will be no better roads anywhere in the state of Minnesota than can be found between here and the settlers forty miles away and the tedious forty mile drive with an oxteam will be a two hour pleasure trip in an automobile.

SENIOR CLASS A LARGE ONE.

Class of 1911. Largest In History of Lincoln High School.

The graduating class of the Thief River Falls High School will this year far outnumber that of any previous year. In 1904 the first class to complete the High School course was composed of but two members but so quickly have our schools developed that now the present graduating class, the eighth, numbers thirty five members as follows:

SENIOR CLASS 1911.

The words Normal, English, Scientific and Classical which follow each name indicate the particular course each student has completed tho some of the students have taken combined courses and the above classification does not exactly indicate the scope of work done.

The exact date of the class day program, the Baccalaureate sermon and the commencement exercises will be published later when they are definitely decided upon.

The Baccalaureate sermon will be given this year by Rev. Roseland of the United Lutheran church and will in all probability be given in the Auditorium as none of our city churches are half large enough for any such occasion.

Young Men in Charge

At a meeting of the County Fair Association held last Monday night at the Commercial club rooms the future of the Pennington County Fair was intrusted to the young men of our city. Willis Akre is secretary and will serve again this year. As President of the Association W. W. Prichard, Jr. was elected to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of C. C. Jackson. David Gustafson was elected 2nd Vice President to fill the place formerly held by O. J. Schei and John Myrland was elected Ass't. Secretary.

Mrs. Bryant, Chas. Gustafson and Martin Evenson were appointed a committee on premium list.

With the affairs of the Fair so much in the hands of our young men the Pennington County Fair ought to not only equal the success of former years but achieve further greatness. The plan at present is to make this year's fair a bigger and better one in every way.

GETS GOOD POSITION

Mrs. R. J. Johnson and daughter leave here next Monday for Lewis Lake, Idaho where they will join Mr. Johnson who has been there for the last month.

Mr. Johnson has secured a good position with the lumber company there and left here to go to a larger field. The Johnson family have many friends here who will be glad to learn of their good fortune.

Rev. Alexander Irvine of New York, will be in Thief River Falls Thursday May 8th, and will give a lecture on Socialism in the Auditorium at 8 o'clock p. m. The local Socialists feel jubilant because they were able to secure such a prominent speaker. He is one of the foremost lecturers on the Socialist platform today. 35 and 25 cents admission will be charged, which will include 40 weeks subscription to the Appeal to Reason. Ladies free. See bills for further particulars.

GRIEG'S "LANDKJENDING."

One of Star Numbers at Sangerfest Here Next Month June 23-24.

One of the great pieces of classical music to be rendered here at the Sangerfest next June is Greig's immortal composition, "Landkjending."

To give our people an idea of the prominence of this composition and the consideration it is receiving at the hands of the musical world at large we give the following clipping from a Milwaukee paper:

> Milwaukee, Wis., April 28—Greig's Landkjending will be given in an impressive way at the German Sangerfest in this city in the latter part of June. The big chorus numbers about 3,500 voices and the orchestra has 65 members. Ludvig Hess will sing the sole parts. Greig's "Foram Sydens Kloster" will be sung by ladies' chorus of 700 voices. Other numbers by Greig are Hjertesaar" and "Vaaren."

Ogahmah to Change Hands.

A deal was practically closed yesterday whereby the old, reliable stand by the Ogahmah Hotel, will pass from the Robbecke family to E. A. Harrington of Minneapolis, the transfer to take place the fifteenth of this month.

Mr. Harrington comes here very highly recommended as a hotel man and has the confidence of the public who are interested in the improvement of our hotels.

The Robbecke family will move to a cottage on Lake Vergas for this summer while they formulate plans for the future. Miss Elsie expects to go to Stillwater.

The Ogahmah Hotel has been a landmark that all the old timers remember with pleasant thots and the Robbecke name will be cherished by many as long as the present generation continues.

Country Pleases Him

O. T. Mutlio of Hooper, N. Dak., was one of the most determined land seekers in here this spring. To make sure of seeing as much as posible he disembarked at Fosston, Minn., and from there traveled by team a hundred miles northward to Grygla and thence west to the city of Thief River Falls. He was well impressed with the country and expects to come back and establish himself upon some of this land. He returned to his home Wednesday.

THREE HOGS FOR 85 DOLLARS

John Johnson, a prosperous farmer living near Hazel south-east of here, brought in three hogs to-day which weighed about 1,000 pounds dressed. He got 8¾ cents or about 85 dollars for the three. They were only eleven months old at that. If our farmers would study the production of pork and diversify more in the way of feeding their grains instead of selling them they would be surprised at the greater profits; their farms too would fare better.

STATEMENT BEING PREPARED.

A. H. Fasel is spending the week at Red Lake Falls and in company with an expert accountant is preparing a financial statement for the Pennington county board upon which the division of property and indebtedness will be made between Red Lake and Pennington counties. This is a hard and tedious job and will probably take at least two weeks to complete. The county boards will, it is expected, be ready to meet on or about May 15th.

SPRING RECITAL

Last evening the Ladies Music Club gave their first "Ladies Thursday Musical' at the Lincoln High School. The recital was very well rendered and was thoroughly enjoyed. All of the numbers were good, and the lades nicely responded to several encores.

At the close of the recital Mrs. G. Halvorson made a few remarks about the object of the club. It takes in the more mature women; those who are music teachers; those who can play or sing; and those who are interested in music and desirous of promoting musical culture. Later on an auxiliary club composed of the younger women will be formed.

NO BIRTHDAY CELEBRATION

Thirty-five Years Since Prof. Bell Invented the Telephone. Ridiculed.

Unheralded by celebration and gliding by without noise or ceremony, the anniversary of the birth of the telephone has just passed into history. For it was thirty-five years ago this spring that Alexander Graham Bell received from the United States Government the patent that was destined to give a tremendous boost to civilization.

With this official action the unknown professor of elocution and student of acoustics joined the ranks of the world's greatest inventors. His path was far from a smooth one, back in 1876, when some folks doubted, others scoffed at and most people ignored the product of his genius. They called it a scientific toy, and as such it seemed for a while doomed to remain in obscurity.

Financial men laughed outright at Dr. Bell's scheme to sell his patent for $100,000. It was scoffing of the same sort that Morse had received, forty years before(when he tried to induce the government to pay him $60,000 for his pet, the telegraph.

Today the telephone system that bears the name of the inventor has more than twelve million miles of wire in operation—enough to girdle the earth many hundreds of times. The value of the telephone properties in the United States today aggregate a sum that makes the $100,000 that Dr. Bell requested look like the proverbial thirty cents.

It was long before the march of progress seized upon the telephone. The wizards of the electrical field put their time into perfecting the technical details of the "scientific toy."

The usefulness of the instrument increased, and with it the demand for a share in its benefits. Today the annual earnings of the telephone in the United States are no less than $200,000,000. One manufacturing concern, the Western Electric Company, has 7,000,000 of its telephones in use.

The fact that Dr. Bell himself is still alive to see the wonderful conquest his toy has made emphasizes the youthfulness of the telephone. Thirty-five years seems a short time for an agency so widely known and so universally accepted as a necessity

Here are some of the achivements of the telephone in its brief span of existance:

It has made possible what is known as "modern business methods." Every business man has a telephone at his elbow, and finds it his most trustworthy assistant. The telephone came into the office and into the discard went delays, confusion, uncertainties, etc., etc.

It has envaded the homes of the people themselves. Here it performs faithfully its many tasks—saving time and steps, providing protection and affording means of social diversion.

Without it the skyscraper in the busy city would be impossible. Telephone systems and elevators—take these away and the modern office building will be useless.

It has smoothed the way for thousands of railway trains. In service on the dispatching circuits of 37,000 miles of road, supplanting the old, familiar telegraph, with never an accident due to its use—that is the record of the railway telephone today.

It has banished isolation on more than two million American farms. In the rural districts the telephone has done incalculable good. Many say this is the most valuable service the handy little instrument has performed.

The rural telephone enables the farmer to conduct his business with the greatest profit to himself. He keeps posted on the prices of his products and he economizes by cutting out his trips to town when a telephone message will suffice. The loneliness which has made farm life a burden to so many people, especially to the women and children; the fear that takes possession of some when the men are away, the fear of the inability to reach a doctor in times of sickness, are all banished by the telephone in the farmhouse.

What will come next? An army of engineers is constantly at work planning and devising new wonders of the telephone. The rapid spread of service over the wires shows no signs of abating, and telephone men declare the future is most rosy. Only last month a conversation was carried on between New York City and Denver, over two thousand miles.

Is it unreasonable to suppose that an instrument as young as thirty-five is in the prime of its life, and that it still has many new achievements ahead of it?

may not paralyze a home so completely as a mother's long illness. But Dr. King's New Life Pills are a splendid remedy for women. "They gave me wonderful benefit in constipation and female trouble," wrote Mrs. M. C. Dunlap, of Leadill, Tenn. If ailing, try them. 25c at all Druggists.

The Odd Fellows attended the M. E. church in a body on Sunday morning last, when the pastor of the church delivered the annual sermon. This is the third year that the M. E. church has welcomed the order. The choir rendered some excellent music and the service throughout was spiritual in its character. The occasion was saddened however, by the memory of some who attended the service of last year but who have crossed the great divide since that date.

SCHOOL NOTES

The Juniors will present a literary program at the Lincoln next Friday evening at 8 p. m. A small admission of ten cents will be charged, but the cost of admission is no criterion of the value of the entertainment. It is expected that this entertainment will equal that recently presented by the seniors, and that is saying not a little.

This week closes the school month of April and but four weeks of school remain. These will be crowded with reviews, examinations and other work incident to the last month.

A teachers' meeting was held at the normal room Tuesday afternoon.

The senior class is ordering all class pins, banners, etc., from or through local dealers where it is possible to do so.

Rev. Adolph B. Roseland of the United Lutheran church of this city will preach the baccalaureate sermon on the evening of Sunday, May 28th. All the churches of the city have been or will be invited to officiate at this function. It is the custom of the school to invite the churches in turn and the senior classes decide the matter by ballot.

The department plan of work in operation in the grammar grades has proved satisfactory and will be continued next year.

About fifty agriculture and botany students are planting gardens in the Bishop property near the Lincoln. The tract south of town, being new breaking of grubbed land, will be sown to flax with the exception of one acre which will be planted with potatoes. Next year this five acre plot will be in condition for gardening or for any other purpose.

The class memorial which the 1911 seniors have decided to present the school will consist of a generous cash donation to the board of education to build or aid in building a neat fountain immediately opposite the main entrance to the Lincoln. A concrete saucer shaped fountain some sixteen or eighteen feet in diameter and two feet high and ornamented with a low iron railing or fence can be constructed at a moderate cost. Some device could be erected in the center for the fountain. If not this season at least in the near future, the high school campus will be leveled, seeded and completed with curving cement walks. This ground is possible of being made the most handsome spot in the city and a fountain built as suggested will enhance the beauty and value of the property greatly.

Miss Olson, teacher of home economics at Warren, spent Wednesday visiting the local schools.

IN THE INTEREST OF THE FARMERS

Senator Nelson Proposes to Amend Canadian Pact.

OFFERS LIST OF CHANGES

Would Transfer Certain Products From the Free List to the Dutiable List.

Washington, April 28.—Important changes in the pending Canadian trade agreement are proposed in a series of amendments offered by Senator Knute Nelson of Minnesota. These amendments provide that the following farm products transferred to the free list by the Canadian bill shall be assessed customs duties as indicated:

Cattle less than one year old, $1 per head; all other cattle valued at $14 or less, $2.50 per head; when valued at more than $14, 20 per cent ad valorem.

Swine, $1 per head.

Horses and mules, valued at $150 or less, $20 per head; when valued at more than $150, 20 per cent ad valorem.

Sheep, one year old or more, $1 per head.

All other live animals, 20 per cent ad valorem.

Wheat, 12½ cents per bushel; barley, 15 cents per bushel; oats, 8 cents per bushel; rye, 6 cents per bushel.

Buckwheat, 7 cents per bushel.

Flaxseed, 15 cents per bushel.

Potatoes, 5 cents per bushel.

Butter, 4 cents per pound; cheese, 4 cents per pound.

All of these rates constitute reductions in the figures imposed by the Payne-Aldrich law.

The amendments indicate the line of attack that Senator Nelson will make on the Canadian bill. The adoption of any one of the Nelson amendments, it is held by the administration leaders, would destroy the Canadian agreement.

"My purpose in presenting these amendments is to protect the Northwestern farmer," said Senator Nelson. "The tariff bars are razed by this Canadian bill. Some of the rates I propose constitute 50 per cent cuts on farm products, enumerated in my amendments."

MAKE FORMAL PROTEST ONLY

Progressive Senators Drop Threatened Fight on Committees.

Washington, April 29.—The senate formally organized for business by adopting the list of appointments to committees drawn up by the majority of both parties.

The expected fight against the adoption of the lists threatened by the progressive Republicans did not develop, Senator La Follette contenting himself with reading a formal protest against the selections made by the regular Republicans.

When Mr. La Follette had concluded the progressive statement Senator Gallinger, chairman of the committee on committees, said he was quite content to let the "insurgent" statement go before the country, together with the list of committees as framed. Mathematically, he declared, the "insurgent" wing was entitled to 100 committee places As a matter of fact they were given 114 places.

The committee list then was adopted with only a few scattering "noes" from the insurgents.

INCREASES THE MEMBERSHIP

House Passes Congressional Reapportionment Bill

Washington, April 28.—The house passed the bill to enlarge its membership to 433 and to reapportion congressional districts.

The increase of the size of the house was agreed to by members of both parties, but many Republicans attacked it on the ground that it would make the house more unwieldy.

Progressive Republicans were particularly vigorous in opposing the increase, declaring that if it were not for the demands of those states that would otherwise lose members there would be a general sentiment in favor of keeping the membership at the present size of 391.

EIGHT PEOPLE DIE IN FIRE

Douglas, Ariz., May 2.—The capture of the important Pacific coast port of Topolobampo, in the state of Sinaloa, Mex., by rebels was reported here. This port is but a short distance from the cities of Fuerte and San Blas, recently taken by the insurrectos.

Direct Election of Senators.

Washington, May 2.—The joint resolution recently passed by the house providing for the popular election of senators was favorably reported to the senate from the judiciary committee by Senator Borah of Idaho. At a meeting of the judiciary committee the adoption of the resolution was recommended by a vote of 7 to 5

Intervention in Morocco.

Paris, April 28.—France has notified the signatories of the Algeciras conference agreement that prompt and energetic intervention in Morocco by France had become necessary to protect foreigners at Fez, re-establish order throughout the country and safeguard the sovereignty of the sultan.

American and German Firemen.

A Hamburg fireman of distinction who had occasion to visit the United States some years ago returned full of admiration for the splendid way in which American fire companies usually respond to alarms and was of the opinion that the American companies were ready for action more promptly than those in Germany, because the individual units subordinated everything else to the point of leaving quarters at the earliest possible instant, to do which the American fireman at night would slide down the pole partially clad and was indifferent as to his appearance in riding to the scene of the fire so long as he was on the spot to meet the emergency. The European fireman, on the other hand, having had military training, would be inclined to avoid the pole and would walk down the stairs, devoting a few seconds to the adjustment of his garments, and would be prepared to start only when ready to appear before the public in regulation costume.—Consular Reports.

How Cloves Are Cultivated.

Cloves are now cultivated in many tropical regions. A clove tree begins to bear at the age of ten years and continues until it reaches the age of seventy-five years. There are two crops a year, one in June and another in December. The tree is an evergreen and grows from forty to fifty feet high, with large oblong leaves and crimson flowers at the end of small branches in clusters of from ten to twenty. The tree belongs to the same botanical order as the guava. The cloves, which are the undeveloped buds are at first white, then light green and at the time of gathering bright red. Pieces of white cloth are spread under the trees at harvesting time, and the branches are beaten gently with bamboo sticks until the cloves drop. They are dried in the sun, being tossed about daily until they attain the rich dark color that proclaims them ready for shipment.—Harper's Weekly.

Rubbing It In.

"You have kept my nose to the grindstone, Serepta," spoke her husband, nerving himself to say something at last, "for fifteen years!"

"I've done more than that, Volney," snapped Mrs. [illegible], "I have made you turn the grindstone."—Chicago Tribune.

HOUSEHOLD HINTS

Put the screens on the windows and doors before the flies appear. The large blue flies are now on the wing.

Allow nothing to stand about which attracts flies. Avoid throwing scraps of vegetablees or animal matter on the ground near the house. Waste water from the kitchen, thrown continously in one place, renders the door-yard unsightly and unsanitary.

Don't neglect to screen the cellar windows. The cellar needs daily airing; and, unless the windows are screened, flies and many other pests will enter.

Air the cellar during the cool hours of the day, and keep it closed during the remaining hours. This will keep the cellar always fresh and cool, and free from dampness.

Whitewash the ceiling and walls of the cellar in the spring and fall. This makes it light, as well as clean and sweet. Although lime is of low germedicidal value, a free use of it aids in preventing bacterial growth—Mary L. Bull, University Farm.

SPRAYING THE ORCHARD

The dormant spray of lime-sulphur, and the first spraying of self-boiled lime-sulphur and arsenate of lead, applied as the buds are ready to burst, will have been given at this date. The third spraying of the season (if we count the dormant spray as the first) should now be planned for. The insect we are after at this time is the Codding Moth, or apple worm. The worm stage of this moth is the pinkish white larva that is found so often in wormy apples. The moth lays its eggs on the leaves or on the young fruit, and the little caterpilars hatching from the eggs make their way to the calyx end of the fruit, which at this time is uppermost and wide open. In this calyx cup the insect eats its first meal, afterward eating its way into the fruit around the seeds. Now, if we can get this calyx cup filled with a stomach poison, the first meal of the creature here will be its last. Arsenate of lead, three pounds to fifty gallons of water, is the poison recommended for this spraying. The best time for this is just after the blossoms drop. At about this time, too, the plum curculois are beginning to be active in egg-laying, and the coating of arsenate of lead will kill many of the adults before much damage is done. Self-boiled lime-sulphur used at this time will prevent scab and, to a certain extent, bitter rot, and some of the leaf spots. A combined spray, therefore, applied immediately after the blossoms drop, of self-boiled lime-sulphur wash, to which has been added arsenate of lead (three pounds of arsenate of lead to fifty gallons of the lime-sulphur) is the best spraying material to use at this time.—A. G. Ruggles, Division of Entomology.

Missouri's Remarkable Cow

The world's record for milk production is now held by a cow at the Missouri College of Agriculture, named "Misouri Chief Josephine." During the six months ending July 17th 1910 this remarkable animal produced 17.008.8 pounds of milk, or 46.7 quarts every day for 182 days; the butterfat averaging 3.6 per cent. At the current retail price of milk in St. Paul, 7c a quart, the gross income from the sale of such a quantity would be $3.26.9 per day, or at the rate of over $1,193 a year.

Of course, this cow affords only an exceptional illustration of what may now and then be accomplished by perfect care and perfect feeding, with an animal of superb build, capacity and constitution. The same care and feeding, bestowed on the best animals in other herds, whatever the breed, will not often produce as large results. Yet the fact that they have been obtained with "Misouri Chief Josephine" proves that they are elsewhere possible, and therefore within the scope of a legitimate dairying ambition. Furthermore, such success in stimulating the endeavors of dairymen all along the line, production of milk per cow. They are of advantage in illustrating not only the virtues of a balanced ration, correct housing and cleanliness, but of kindness to animals. For it is beyond question that the cow yields her most liberal flow of milk only to those who have deserved and won her affections.

Cavanagh, Forest Ranger

The Great Conservation Novel

By HAMLIN GARLAND

Copyright, 1910, by Hamlin Garland

With a faint hope of this the girl rose and went about her daily tasks, but the day passed and another without word or sign of the recreant lover, and each day brought a deeper sense of loss, but her pride would not permit her to show her grief.

Young Gregg, without knowing in the least the cause of her troubled face, took this occasion to offer comfort. His manner toward her had changed since she no longer had a part in the management of the eating house, and for that reason she did not repulse him as sharply as she had been wont to do. He really bore Cavanagh no ill will and was, indeed, shrewd enough to understand that Lee admired the ranger and that his own courtship was rather hopeless. Nevertheless he persisted, his respect for her growing as he found her steadfast in her refusal to permit any familiarity.

"See here, Miss Virginia," he cried as she was passing him in the hall, "I can see you're worried about Lize—I mean your mother—and if I can be of any use I hope you'll call on me." As she thanked him without enthusiasm he added, "How is she tonight?"

"I think she's better."

"Can I see her?"

His tone was so earnest that the girl was moved to say, "I'll ask her."

"I wish you would. I want to say something to her."

Lize's voice reached where they stood. "Come in, Joe; the door's open."

He accepted her invitation rather awkwardly, but his face was impassive as he looked down upon her.

"Well, how about it?" she asked. "What's doing in the town?"

"Not much of anything except talk. The whole country is buzzing over this dismissal of the chief forester."

"They'd better be doing something about that murder."

"They are. They're going up there in streams to see where the work was done. The coroner's inquest was held yesterday." He grinned. "'Parties came to their death by persons unknown.'"

Lize scowled. "It's a wonder they don't charge it up to Ross Cavanagh or some other ranger."

"That would be a little too raw, even for this country. They're all feeling gay over this change in the forestry head. But, see here, don't you want to get out for a ride? I've got my new machine out here. It rides like silk."

"I reckon a hearse is about my kind," she replied darkly. "If you could take me up to Cavanagh's cabin I'd go," she added. "I want to see him."

"I can take you part way," he instantly declared. "But you'd have to ride a horse the last ten miles."

"Couldn't do it, Joe," she sighed. "These last few days I've been about as boneless as an eel. Funny the way a fellow keeps going when he's got something to do that has to be done. I'll tell you what, if you want to take me and Lee up to Sulphur I'll go you."

"Sure thing. What day?"

"Not for a day or two. I'm not quite up to it just now, but by Saturday I'll be saddlewise again."

Joe turned joyously to Lee. "That will be great! Won't you come out for a spin this minute?"

For a moment Lee was tempted. Anything to get away from this horrible little den and the people who infested it was her feeling, but she distrusted Gregg, and she knew that every eye in the town would be upon her if she went, and, besides, Ross might return while she was away. "No; not today," she replied finally, but her voice was gentler than it had ever been to him.

The young fellow was moved to explain his position to Lize. "You don't think much of me, and I don't blame you. I haven't been much use so far, but I'm going to reform. If I had a girl like Lee Virginia to live up to I'd make a great citizen. I don't lay my arrest up against Cavanagh. I'm ready to pass that by. And as for this other business—this free range war in which the old man is mixed up—I want you to know that I'm against it. Dad knows his day is short; that's what makes him so hot. But he's a bluff—just a fussy old bluff. He knows he has no more right to the government grass than anybody else, but he's going to get ahead of the cattlemen if he can."

"Does he know who burned them sheep herders?"

"Of course he knows, but ain't going to say so. You see, that old Basque who was killed was a monopolist too. He went after that grass without asking anybody's leave. Moreover, he belonged to that Mexican-dago outfit that everybody hates. The old man isn't crying over that job; it's money in his pocket. All the same, it's too good a chance to put the hooks into the cattlemen; hence his offering a reward, and it looks as if something would really be done this time. They say Neill Ballard was mixed up in it and that old guy that showed me the sheep. But I don't take much stock in that. Whoever did it was paid by the cattlemen, sure thing." The young fellow's tone and bearing made a favorable impression upon Lize. She had never seen this side of him, for the reason that he had hitherto treated her as a bartender. She was acute enough to understand that her social status had changed along with her release from the cash register, and she was slightly more reconciled, although she could not see her way to providing a living for herself and Lee. For all these reasons she was unwontedly civil to Joe and sent him away highly elated with the success of his interview.

"I'm going to let him take us up to Sulphur," she said to Lee. "I want to go to town."

Lee was silent, but a keen pang ran through her heart, for she perceived in this remark by her mother a tacit acknowledgment of Ross Cavanagh's desertion of them both. His invitation to them to come and camp with him was only a polite momentary impulse. "I'm ready to go," she announced at last. "I'm tired of this place. Let us go tomorrow."

CHAPTER XVIII.

A CALL FOR HELP.

On the following morning, while they were busy packing for the journey to Sulphur, Redfield rolled up to the door in company with a young man in the uniform of a forester.

"Go ask Reddy to come in," commanded Lize. "I want to see him."

Redfield met the girl at the door and presented his companion as "Mr. Dalton, district forester." Dalton was a tall young fellow with a marked southern accent. "Is Cavanagh, the ranger, in town?" he asked.

"No," Lee replied, with effort; "he was here a few days ago, but he's gone back to the forest."

Redfield studied the girl with keen gaze, perceiving a passionate restraint in her face.

"How is your mother?" he asked politely.

Lee smiled faintly. "She's able to sit up. Won't you come in and see her?"

"With pleasure," assented Redfield, "but I want to see you alone. I have something to say to you." He turned to his superior. "Just go into the cafe, Dalton. I'll see you in a moment."

Lee Virginia, hitherto ashamed of the house, the furniture, the bed—everything—led the way without a word of apology. It was all detached now—something about to be left behind, like a bad garment borrowed in a time of stress. Nothing mattered since Ross did not return.

Lize, looking unwontedly refined and gentle, was sitting in a big rocking chair with her feet on a stool, her eyes fixed on the mountains, which showed through the open window. All the morning a sense of profound change, of something passing, had oppressed her. Now that she was about to leave the valley its charm appealed to her. She was tearing up a multitude of tiny roots of whose existence she had hitherto remained unaware. "I belong here," she acknowledged silently. "I'd be homesick anywhere else on God's earth. It's rough and fly bit and all that, but so am I. I wouldn't fit in anywhere that Lee belonged."

She acknowledged an especial liking for Redfield, and she had penetration enough, wordly wisdom enough, to know that Lee belonged more to his world than to her own and that his guidance and friendship were worth more, much more, than that of all the rest of the country, her own included. Therefore she said: "I'm mighty glad to see you, Reddy. Sit down. You've got to hear my little spiel this time."

Redfield, perched on the edge of a tawdry chair, looked about (like the charity visitor in a slum kitchen) without intending to express disgust, but it was a dismal room in which to be sick, and he pitied the woman the more profoundly as he remembered her in the days when "all outdoors" was none too wide for her.

Lize began abruptly: "I'm down, but not out. In fact, I was coming up to see you this afternoon. Lee and I are just about pulling out for good."

"Indeed! Why not go back with me?"

"You can take the girl back if you want to, but now that I'm getting my chance at you I may not go."

Redfield's tone was entirely cordial as he turned to Lee. "I came hoping to carry you away. Will you come?"

"I'm afraid I can't unless mother goes," she replied sadly.

Lize waved an imperative hand. "Fade away, child. I want to talk with Mr. Redfield alone. Go—see!"

Thus dismissed, Lee went back to the restaurant, where she found the forester just sitting down to his luncheon. "Mr. Redfield will be out in a few minutes," she explained.

"Won't you join me?" he asked in the frank accent of one to whom women are comrades. "The supervisor has been telling me about you."

She took a seat facing him, feeling something refined in his long, smoothly shaven, boyish face. He seemed very young to be district forester, and his eyes were a soft brown, with small wrinkles of laughter playing round their corners.

He began at once on the subject of his visit. "Redfield tells me you are a friend of Mr. Cavanagh's. Did you know that he had resigned?"

She faced him with startled eyes. "No, indeed. Has he done so?"

"Yes. The supervisor got a letter yesterday inclosing his resignation and asking to be relieved at once. And when I heard of it I asked the supervisor to bring me down to see him. He's too good a man to lose."

"Why did he resign?"

"He seemed very bitter over the chief's dismissal. But I hope to persuade him to stay in the service. He's too valuable a man to lose just now, when the war is so hot. I realize that his salary is too small. But there are other places for him. Perhaps when he knows that I have a special note to him from the chief he will reconsider. He's quite capable of the supervisor's position, and Mr. Redfield is willing to resign in his favor. I'm telling you all this because Mr. Redfield has told me of your interest in Mr. Cavanagh, or, rather, his interest in you."

Sam Gregg, entering the door at this moment, came directly to the forester's table. He was followed by the sheriff, a bearded old man with a soiled collar and a dim eye.

Gregg growled out, "You'd better keep your man Cavanagh in the hills, Mr. Forester, or somebody will take a pot shot at him."

"Why, what's new?"

"His assistant is down with smallpox."

"Smallpox!" exclaimed Dalton.

Every jaw was fixed and every eye turned upon the speaker.

"Smallpox!" gasped Lee.

Gregg resumed, enjoying the sensation he was creating. "Yes, that Basque herder of mine, the one up near Black Tooth, sent word he was sick, so I hunted up an old tramp by the name of Edwards to take his place. Edwards found the dago dying of pox and skipped out over the range, leaving him to die alone. Cavanagh went up and found the dago dead and took care of him. Result is he's full of germs and has brought his apprentice down with it, and both of 'em must be quarantined right where they are."

"Good heavens, man," exclaimed Dalton, "this is serious business! Are you sure it's smallpox?"

"One of my men came from there last night. I was there myself on Monday; so was the deputy. The sheriff missed Tom this morning, but I reached him by phone, and Cavanagh admitted to us that the Basque died of smallpox and that he buried him with his own hands."

The sheriff spoke up. "The criminal part of it is this, Mr. Dalton—Cavanagh didn't report the case when he came down here, just when about leaving a trail of poison. Why didn't he report it? He should be arrested."

"Wait a moment," said Dalton. "Perhaps it wasn't pox; perhaps it was only mountain fever. Cavanagh is not the kind of man to involve others in a pestilence. I reckon he knew it was nothing but a fever, and, not wishing to alarm his friends, he just slid into town and out again."

A flash of light, of heat, of joy, went through Lee's heart as she listened to Dalton's defense of Cavanagh. "That was the reason why he rode away," she thought. "He was afraid of bringing harm to us." And this conviction lighted her face with a smile even while the forester continued his supposition by saying, "Of course proper precautions should be taken, and as we are going up there the supervisor and I will see that a quarantine is established if we find it necessary."

Gregg was not satisfied. "Cavanagh admitted to the deputy and to me that he believed the case to be smallpox and said that he had destroyed the camp and everything connected with it except the horse and the dog, and yet he comes down here, infecting everybody he meets." He turned to Lee. "You'd better burn the bed he slept on. He's left a trail of germs wherever he went. I say the man is criminally liable and should be jailed if he lives to get back to town."

Lee's mind was off now on another tangent. "Suppose it is true?" she asked herself. "Suppose he has fallen sick away up there, miles and miles from any nurse or doctor"—

"There's something queer about the whole business," pursued Gregg. "For instance, who is this assistant he's got? Johnson said there was an old man in ranger uniform pottering round. Why didn't he send word by him? Why did he let me come to the door? He might have involved me in the disease. I tell you, if you don't take care of him the people of the county will."

The forester looked grave. "If he knew it was smallpox and failed to report it he did wrong, but you say he took care of this poor shepherd—nursed him till he died and buried him with his own hands. You can't [illegible] ... That's [illegible] ... man. You wouldn't have done it!" he ended, addressing Gregg. "Sickness up there two full miles above sea level is quite a different proposition from sickness in Sulphur City or the Fork. I shall not condemn Mr. Cavanagh till I hear his side of the story."

Lee turned a grateful glance upon him. "You must be right. I don't believe Mr. Cavanagh would deceive any one."

"Well, we'll soon know the truth," said Dalton, "for I'm going up there. If the ranger has been exposed he must not be left alone."

"He ain't alone," declared the sheriff. "Tom phoned me that he had an assistant."

"Swenson, I suppose," said Redfield, who entered at this moment. "Swenson is his assistant."

"I didn't see him myself," Gregg continued, "but I understood the deputy to say that he was an old man."

"Swenson is a young man," corrected Redfield.

The sheriff insisted. "Tom said it was an old man—a stranger to him—tall, smooth shaven, not very strong, he said—'peared to be a cook. He had helped nurse the dago, so Tom said."

"That's very curious," mused Redfield. "There isn't an old man in the service of this forest. There's a mistake somewhere."

"Well," concluded Gregg, "that's what he said. I thought at first it might be that old hobo Edwards, but this feller being in uniform and smooth shaven"— His face changed; his voice deepened. "Say, I believe it was Edwards, and, furthermore, Edwards is the convict that Texas marshal was after the other day, and this man Cavanagh—your prize ranger—is harboring him."

"What nonsense!" exclaimed Redfield.

The sheriff banged his hand upon the table. "That's the whole mystery. I see it all now. He's up there concealing this man. He's given out this smallpox scare just to keep the officers away from him. Now you've got it!"

The thunder in his voice drew toward him all those who remained in the dining room, and Lee found herself ringed about by a dozen excited men, but she did not flinch. She was too deeply concerned over Cavanagh's fate to be afraid, and, besides, Redfield and the forester were beside her.

The supervisor was staggered by Gregg's accusation and by certain confirmatory facts in his own possession, but he defended Cavanagh bravely. "You're crazy," he replied. "Why should Ross do such a foolish thing? What is his motive? What interest would he have in this man Edwards, whom you call a tramp? He can't be a relative and certainly not a friend of Cavanagh's, for you say he is a convict. Come, now, your hatred of Cavanagh has gone too far."

Gregg was somewhat cooled by this dash of reason, but replied: "I don't know what relation he is, but these are facts. He's concealing an escaped convict, and he knows it."

Dalton put in a quiet word. "What is the use of shouting a judgment against a man like Cavanagh before you know the facts? He's one of the best and ablest rangers on this forest. I don't know why he has resigned, but I'm sure"—

"Has he resigned?" asked Gregg eagerly.

"He has."

"A good job for him. I was about to circulate a petition to have him removed."

"If all the stockmen in the valley had signed a petition against him it wouldn't have done any good," replied Dalton. "We know a good man when we see him. I'm here to offer him promotion, not to punish him."

Lee, looking about at the faces of these men and seeing disappointment in their faces, lost the keen sting of her own humiliation. "In the midst of such a fight as this how can he give time or thought to me?" Painful as the admission was, she was forced to admit that she was a very humble factor in a very large campaign. "But suppose he falls ill!" Her face grew white and set and her lips bitter. "That would be the final tragic touch," she thought, "to have him come down of a plague from nursing one of Sam Gregg's sheep herders." Aloud she said: "His resignation comes just in time, doesn't it? He can now be sick without loss to the service."

Dalton answered her. "The supervisor has not accepted his resignation. On the contrary, I shall offer him a higher position. His career as a forester is only beginning. He would be foolish to give up the work now, when the avenues of promotion are just opening. I can offer him very soon the supervision of a forest."

As they talked Lee felt herself sinking the while her lover rose. It was all true. The forester was right. Ross was capable of any work they might demand of him. He was too skilled, too intelligent, too manly, to remain in the forest, heroic as its duties seemed.

Upon this discussion Lize, hobbling painfully, appeared. With a cry of surprise Lee rose to meet her.

"Mother, you must not do this!"

She waved her away. "I'm all right," she said, "barring the big marbles in my slippers." Then she turned to Dalton. "Now, what's it all about? Is it true that Ross is down?"

"No. So far as we know, he is well."

"Well, I'm going to find out. I don't intend to set here and have him up there without a cook or a nurse."

At this moment a tall, fair young fellow, dressed in a ranger's uniform, entered the room and made his way directly to the spot where Lee, her mother and Redfield were standing. "Mr. Supervisor, Cavanagh has sent me to tell you that he needs a doctor. He's got a sick man up at the station, and he's afraid it's a case of smallpox." He turned to Lee. "He told me to tell you that he would have written, only he was afraid to even send a letter out."

"What does he need?" asked Redfield.

"He needs medicine and food, a doctor, and he ought to have a nurse."

"That's my job," said Lize.

"Nonsense," said Redfield. "You're not fit to ride a mile. I won't hear of your going."

"You wait and see. I'm going, and you can't stop me."

"Who is the man with him?" asked the forester.

"I don't know—an old herder, he said. He said he could take care of him all right for the present, but that if he were taken down himself"—

Lee's mounting emotion broke from her in a little cry. "Oh, Mr. Redfield, please let me go too! I want to help! I must help!"

Redfield said: "I'll telephone to Sulphur City and ask Brooks to get a nurse and come down as soon as possible. Meanwhile I'll go out to see what the conditions are."

"I'm going, too, I tell you," announced Lize. "I've had the cussed disease, and I'm not afraid of it. We had three sieges of it in my family. You get me up there, and I'll do the rest."

"But you are ill."

"I was, but I'm not now." Her voice was firmer than it had been for days. "All I needed was something to do. Ross Cavanagh has been like a son to me for two years. He's the one man in this country I'd turn my hand over for—barring yourself, Reddy—and it's my job to see him through this pinch."

In spite of all opposition she had her way. Returning to her room to get such clothing as she needed for her stay in the hills, she waited for Redfield to send a carriage to her. "I can't ride a horse no more," she sorrowfully admitted.

Lee's secret was no secret to any one there. Her wide eyes and heaving breast testified to the profound stir in her heart. She was in an anguish of fear lest Ross should already be in the grip of his loathsome enemy. That it had come to him by way of a brave and noble act made the situation only the more tragic.

CHAPTER XIX.

THE PESTHOUSE.

Cavanagh had kept a keen watch over Wetherford, and when one night the old man began to complain of the ache in his bones his decision was instant.

"You've got it," he said. "It's up to us to move down the valley tomorrow."

Wetherford protested that he would as soon die in the hills as in the valley. "I don't want Lee Virginia to know, but if I seem liable to fade out I'd like Lize to be told that I didn't forget her and that I came back to find out how she was. I hate to be a nuisance to you, and so I'll go down the valley if you say so."

As he was about to turn in that night Ross heard a horse cross the bridge and, with intent to warn the rider of his danger, went to the door and called out: "Halt! Who's there?"

"A friend," replied the stranger in a weak voice.

Ross permitted the visitor to ride up to the pole. "I can't ask you in," he explained. "I've a sick man inside. Who are you, and what can I do for you?"

Notwithstanding this warning the rider dropped from his saddle and came into the light which streamed from the door.

"My name is Dunn," he began. "I'm from Deer Creek."

"I know you," responded the ranger. "You're that rancher I saw working in the ditch the day I went to telephone, and you've come to tell me something about that murder."

The other man broke into a whimper. "I'm a law abiding man, Mr. Cavanagh," he began tremulously. "I've always kept the law and never intended to have anything to do with that business. I was dragged into it against my will. I've come to you because you're an officer of the federal law. You don't belong here. I trust you. You represent the president, and I want to tell you what I know, only I want you to promise not to bring me into it. I'm a man with a family, and I can't bear to have them know the truth."

There were deep agitation and complete sincerity in the rancher's choked and hesitant utterance, and Cavanagh turned cold with a premonition of what he was about to disclose. "I am not an officer of the law, Mr. Dunn, not in the sense you mean, but I will respect your wishes."

"I know that you are not an officer of the county law, but you're not a cattleman. It is your business to keep the peace in the wild country, and you do it. Everybody knows that. But I can't trust the officers of this country; they're all afraid of the cowboys. You are not afraid, and you represent the United States, and I'll tell you. I can't bear it any longer!" he wailed. "I must tell somebody. I can't sleep, and I can't eat. I've been like a man in a nightmare ever since. I had no hand in the killing—I didn't even see it done—but I knew it was going to happen. I saw the committee appointed. The meeting that decided it was held in my barn, but I didn't know what they intended to do. You believe me, don't you?" He peered up at Cavanagh with white face and wild eyes. "I'm over seventy years of age, Mr. Cavanagh, and I've been a law abiding citizen all my life."

Saved by a Witticism.

In February, 1844, when John Tyler was president, the Princeton made a trial trip down the Potomac under Captain R. F. Stockton. On board at the time were President Tyler, members of the cabinet, other notables and a large number of women. As was customary at that time, a salute was to be fired while passing Mount Vernon. Just as it was discharged the gun exploded at the breech, killing five persons and wounding several others. Those killed were Abel P. Upshur, secretary of state; Thomas W. Gilmer, secretary of the navy; Commodore Kennon, chief of the bureau of construction of the navy; Virgil Maxcy, ex-minister to The Hague, and Mr. Gardiner, former senator from New York.

William Wilkins, then secretary of war, was saved by a witticism. Seeing the gun about to be fired, he exclaimed jokingly, "Though secretary of war, I do not like this firing, and I believe I shall run." He thereupon left his position directly beside the gun and had just reached safety when the explosion occurred.

OFFICIAL PAPER OF THE CITY

FRIDAY, MAY 5 1911.

Things must be hazy at Anstad when a certain party is restless because not quite sure her name appears on a certain license.

But while occasionally there is a mother whose energy runs into talk instead of work, mother love becomes more effective if organized and working for just laws and intelligent home administration.

When one reads that 333 out of 1000 children in Ghent, Belgium die in infancy owing to the long hours their mothers spend in the mills, and when one learns that conditions in many American communities are little better, it is time for the mothers to protest and organize to avert this massacre of innocents.

THE PAPER DUTY

A strong resolution favoring free print paper was passed by the American Newspaper Association at their meeting in New York the past week. The things the Senate did last year to the paper tariff are still a sore subject among newspaper publishers.

This was no case where the tariff makers set in stuffed easy chairs and submissively consumed cooked up figures representing only one side of the deal. Representative Mann of Illinois, a staunch protectionist and his sub-committee spent eight months studying paper. They visited leading American and Canadian mills.

The committee established the fact that the labor cost of making paper is less in our country than in Canada.

They therefore recommended and the House voted, that wood pulp come in free, and that the paper duty be reduced from $6 to $2 per ton. But the Senate in its majestic and impregnable wisdom raised the paper duty to $4, and the conference had to compromise on $3.75.

The argument has been formerly used that cheap paper would promote cheap and disreputable newspapers, given to attacks on property.

If motives of this character still tax the distribution of information through the newspaper, these people seem reminiscent of several centuries ago when they used to smash printing presses. No doubt some of our higher-ups feel that the foundations of society would be safer were there no newspapers.

Leaving wholly to one side the question of the need of the American industry for the present measure of protection, as a question on which there are differences of opinion, there is a need for free paper or at least for a very low duty, for the protection of our trees.

If the hoary monarchs of the Forest, which guard the regular flow of the rivers and perhaps rainfall too, must be slaughtered that the American youth may read about the Katzenjammer Kids in the Sunday supplement, by all means let us take the trees of Nova Scotia and Newfoundland for this unseemly sacrifice.

SEEKING SPRING TRADE

The spring months are a peculiarly profitable time for advertising. It is a time when you do not have to convince people that they need to buy. The only thing needed is to convince them that they should buy of you rather than of the other fellow, and in particular that by buying at home they can save express and get satisfaction instead of goods that fail to be as represented.

Spring is particularly a time for renewals of household supplies. The annual orgy of house cleaning, so dreaded by mere man, means the frequent revelation that household furnishings are gone beyond further repair. The wet and mud of spring and winter mean damage to the home equipment, and everywhere housewives are querying as to where they can best make renewals.

The heat of summer means a fresh stock of clothing. Every year the sway of fashion over society makes people less inclined to wear goods that are out of date. The rewards of the merchant who keeps his goods up with metropolitan vogue, are increasing year by year.

The men may make fun of famnine subjection to style, but they are equally driven by the weather to make a complete change of clothing at this time, and last year's styles are less and less popular as the years go by. The freedom with which men's clothing stores in the larger cities advertise indicates that they find it pays.

It makes little difference how stylish and how serviceable a stock is kept, how good values are offered, if the merchant keeps that information within his own bosom.

With the logic of the season compelling purchasers, advertising brings in high returns just now. And the returns are always at better prices than where goods have to be cleared out at forced sales late in the season.

It takes something more today than memory of what a merchant did years ago to bring buyers in hi sstore. The people want to know in black and white what he is doing this week and this month, and they want same basis for comparing his offerings with the mail order catalogues and with other competitors.

THE MOTHERS CONGRESS

The National Congress of Mothers, which met at Washington, April 26, was something of a contrast with the Daughters of the American Revolution Congress of the preceeding week.

Instead of the surging exeitment of emotional campaigns for office, the Mothers hustled the red tape of elections and business under the table as quickly as was decent. Then they hastened to consider subjects like playgrounds, vacation schools, raising the age of consent, and equal rights for mothers-in-guardianship of children. Possibly the mothers feel so "up against" the growing lawlesness of the American child, that they think they must present a united front against the leagued forces of infancy.

Instead of the mother training the children, it sometimes seems as if the children were training the mothers. The youngest feel, perhaps, that if the parent is taught to wait on herself, she quits "bothering you when you want to get out and play ball with the boys."

Also there is a wide spread conviction among the leading spirits of juvenility, that foot ball is a far better exercise than chopping kindling wood and not half as dangerous. Under proper tutelage, the average mother can be brought to see that it is easier to do a thing herself than to see that the youngesters do the job as she wants it.

The Mothers' Congress is sometimes taunted with the gibe that it is composed of women who get together merely to talk about motherhood, while the real mothers are practising its functions in the seclusion of their homes.

The Shadow of Socialism

The Socialists have been making surprising gains recently. In April 1910, they elected a mayor, Emil Seidel, of Milwaukee, and obtained control of that city's municipal government. They elected a member of Congress, Victor L. Berger, in one of the Milwaukee districts in November of that year. In April, 1911, they elected mayors in Berkely, Cal.; Butte, Mont.; Beatrice, Red Cloud and Wymore, Neb.; Flint, Mich.; Girard, Kan.; and Manitowoc, Wisc. They almost doubled their vote for their candidate for mayor in the election just held in Chicago, in which Carter H. Harrison, Democrat, was chosen for the fifth time, thus equalling the record made by his father, of the same name, who was assassinated in the closing days of the world's fair in that city in 1893.

In many towns and cities of the West in which the Socialists failed to elect their candidates for mayor, they chose councilmen and other minor officials. Thus 1911 has shown a much more powerful demonstration by the Socialists than was ever previously made by them.

On judgeships and school director the Socialists have just been beaten in Milwaukee, but this was a combination of the Republican and Democratic parties, in which the Roman Catholic church worked also against the Socialists. Congressman Berger says his party will poll at least 1,000 000 votes in 1912, and he may be correct in his guess. Eugene V. Debs, the Socialist Presidential candidate, received 421,000 votes in 1908, and the recent elections show that that party is much stronger now than it was then. Here is a political organization with which the Republicans and Democrats must reckon.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

terprise in this respect will receive wide publicity through the illustrated lecture work as conducted by R. B. Watrous, secretary of the American Civic Association. To show what the smaller cities and towns of the country can do to beautify grounds, parks and public squares, Mr. Watrous will use slides illustrating Red Wing's public square, including the broadway and river front parkways in connection with his lecture program. In his opinion this city offers an admirable illustration of what any town or city can accomplish in the way of civic improvements when public minded citizens and city officials co-operate for the common good. About five years ago a movement was started in Red Wing for the organization of a civic league. There was a large open area leading from the river front up towards the main portion of the city, which had long been an eye sore. One reason the league was organized was to wipe out this barren, unsightly spot. John W. Rich, a prominent citizen, became interested in the movement, and after making a careful study of the matter, finally made a proposition to the city council. His proposition was to bear the expense of parking one of the blocks, provided the city would pave the abutting streets and cause overhead wires to be placed under ground. The proposition was accepted and work commenced shortly afterward. Later Mr. Rich extended his work to include an additional block leading down to the depot. The association points out that Red Wing has a civic center, and which typefies the best thought and enterprise of its people, which is being developed along a definite and harmonious plan.

The "white list" movement conducted by the Mankato Civic Improvement League is being watched with the keenest interest by the association. This plan, in the opinion of the association's officials, offers an admirable suggestion and one which should strongly appeal to other leagues. Other cities are learning of what is being done in Mankato through the Washington office. Grand Forks, N. D., has a pure food organization which has recently written here for information as to the "white list" movement. It has been advised of what the Mankato league is doing in this regard.

Bay City, Mich., is a typical middle west city of a few thousand inhabitants, with civic problems simiiliar in practically every respect to those of Minnesota's towns and cities. The Civic League of Bay City has recently issued a small pamphlet which is now being distributed through the American Civic Association. Here are a few extracts from this rather remarkable booklet:

"Tear down old sheds or else cover them with vines."

"Cut weeds while young and tender. It will show your public spiritedness and please everybody."

"Trim up your trees which are too low, and which overhang the sidewalk."

"Don't deface any lawn or other property by walking across corners."

"Window and porch boxes are cheaply and easily made, and do much toward beautifying a home, office or place of business."

"Don't allow rubbish to accumulate even in the winter."

This booklet has been much in demand and has been reprinted several times. Town and city league's use it to good advantage because of the valuable suggestions it contains.

Miss Zona Gale of Portage, Wisconsin, did wonders in her little city in awakening civic interst. This interest crystalized into public action and the result was a more beautiful Portage. This association is now preparing for distribution a small publication which will tell in Miss Gale's own words just how this change was brought about and how the smaller towns and cities can solve their problems of a civic nature. From information at hand this forthcoming booklet will be the most practical of its kind thus far issued. It is written by a woman who has had extensive experience in village and town improvement.

SIR DAVID PEAKS

By EDWARD B. TWEEDALE

Copyright by American Press Association, 1911.

While in the detective business I sent a man to state prison for two years. Before he went up he reproached me, with tears in his eyes, because I had taken a livelihood from his wife and children. I felt so sorry for them that I kept the wolf from the door during the term of the husband and father's imprisonment. When he was discharged he came to me, thanked me and said if it ever came in his way he would do me a good turn.

Some time after this I received an anonymous note stating that Dan McConnell would attend an evening function to be given by Nathaniel Ames, prominent in society, that night, for the purpose of plunder. McConnell had got away with perhaps a hundred thousand dollars of loot, and there were rewards out for him to the amount of $20,000. If I could nab him I would be well set up. I rather fancied the information had come from the crook whose family I had befriended, though I confess it was the first bit of gratitude from a criminal I had ever heard of.

Unfortunately I didn't get the information till about 10 o'clock at night. I got into evening dress, hurried around to the house in question and was ushered up to the men's robing room. I had thrown off my wraps and was going downstairs through a hall when I saw a gentleman coming out of one of the rooms. He gave an involuntary start upon seeing me, but he persued his way while I, walking slowly as I passed the room from which he had made an exit, looked in. From the apparel I saw lying about and other indications I judged it was a lady's bedroom.

This made me suspect that the man who had emerged from it had had no business there. Could it be that I had had the luck to light on McConnell on my very entrance? I hurried downstairs and saw the man I had observed just going up to speak to the host and hostess.

"Who is that gentleman?" I asked.

"Sir David Peaks, an Englishman recently arrived, in search of an American wife, they say. He brought letters to Mr. Ames, I believe."

My hopes of an easy find were dashed.

From that time forward I kept my eye open for a suspicious character. McConnell had never been convicted and no picture of him had yet been taken.

Feeling some one jostle against me from behind I turned and there was Sir David. He begged my pardon with an English accent and passed on. It wasn't ten minutes before I saw the host coming for me with an ominous look on his face.

"Have you received an invitation here?" he asked.

"No; have you?" I replied without showing the least discomposure, though I felt that something had gone against me.

"Confound you, sir; I live here."

"Well, all I have to say to you is that you live in a deuced fine house."

I was trying to gain time to get away from several listeners. While we were talking Sir David came up and heard the dialogue. Then he broke in:

"That's a favorite way of robbery among the London crooks. They go to functions as guests and take away the jewelry. You'd better search him."

I was marched into a room by the host and two others, where there was no one to see what was going on, and searched. What was my astonishment at the finding in a pocket in the skirt of my dress coat of a brooch belonging to one of the young ladies of the Ames family.

Like lightning, my having seen Sir David Peaks coming out of a ladies' bedroom and his having jostled me cast a flood of light on the situation. He was McConnell personating a knight, which he could well do since he had come from among the better English classes, being his family's black sheep. Knowing that I had seen him leaving a room in which he had no right, he had slipped the brooch into my pocket and then in some way directed the host's attention to me.

"I'm caught," I said. "I have a confederate in the house. Telephone the police and permit no one to leave till they come. Keep quiet; you don't want a disturbance, I'm sure."

"Who's your confederate?"

"He whom you call Sir David Peaks. Watch him for the present, but don't accuse him."

They all sneered at this, but called the police. I asked them to tell Charlie Bowers to come also. "Bowers knows me," I explained. "I'm an old offender."

They did watch Sir David, though they would not admit to me that they were doing so. When the police came, Bowers and another man in plain clothes were admitted by a back door.

"Charlie," I said, "McConnell, whom you've been looking for, is in this house, masquerading as Sir David Peaks just arrived from London. Ask the host to call him in here."

The host reluctantly consented and Sir David, who had been vainly trying to get out without being seen, was invited to the conference. I thrust my hand into his pocket and pulled it out full of jewelry.

Bowers vouched for me, and I received the next day a check from Mr. Ames for a substantial amount. I also got all the reward offered.

A Terrifying Hat.

When the French artist Benjamin Constant was traveling in Morocco he was invited by the sultan to present himself at court at Fez. The painter's first thought was in regard to his costume. "Court" in Europe was one thing; in Morocco it was likely to prove something different. There was nothing to do, however, but to wear his ordinary evening clothes. He was ignorant of the fact that the Moors look upon black garments as very vulgar, and it was only after his arrival that he learned his mistake. The courtiers smiled openly; worst of all, they sneered. The painter was a man of hasty temper, and suddenly, nettled by their insolence, he closed his opera hat and sprang it open in the faces of the jeering crowd. They scattered, yelling with surprise and fear. The sultan heard the noise and demanded the cause. After he had seen and examined the wonderful hat he gave this oracular opinion:

"If I had lived a hundred years in your country and adopted all your other customs I could never have brought myself to set on my head so hideous a contrivance as that!"

Painfully Explicit.

The proprietor of a certain hotel in Europe has posted up the following warning to his clients:

"Gentlemen who come in this hotel not say anything about their meals they will be charged for, and if they should say beforehand that they are going out to breakfast or dinner, and if they say that they not have anything to eat they will be charged, or unless they bring it to the notice of the manager, and should they want not to say anything, they must order the manager for, and not any one else, and unless they not bring it to the notice of the manager, they will be charged for the least things not, according to hotel rate. And no fuss will be allowed afterward about it, and nothing will be allowed to deduct anything out of it."

After this explicit information there surely could be no excuse for misunderstanding.—Boston Globe.

Surprising the Bullock.

In times of crisis and worry a kind word has been known to have surprisingly good results. The unexpectedness of such a word is perhaps the secret of its force. A late book, "On the Wool Track," backs the moral with an anecdote.

A team was working on the Broken Hill road, and the bullock—the Beelzebub of the team—had gone obstinate, and the coach was passing. The whip was swinging, and some apt remarks were just forming on the back of the teamster's tongue when he caught sight of a clerical hat on the front seat and just in time thought better of it. He coughed politely.

"Ahem—Strawberry," he said, "proceed!"

To his obvious astonishment Strawberry proceeded.

The Indian's Vision.

More or less wonderful accounts have from time to time been given of the powers of vision possessed by savage races. During a British anthropological expedition to the Torres strait the visual faculty of the natives was carefully tested, and from these tests the conclusion was reached that the excellence of vision shown by the savages has a psychological origin—that is to say, it arises from knowing what to look for. When the civilized man acquires familiarity with the environment he can see as far as they can. Thus the power of an Indian to tell the sex of a deer at such a distance that distinguishing features like antlers were invisible was found to rest upon his knowledge of the peculiar gait of the male deer.—Scientific American.

Wondrous Tact.

As an example of graciousness and tact Matthew White tells in Munsey's Magazine of a London clergyman who was called on to address an audience of actors. Alluding to the better social status of the players, the clergyman said that in former days it was sometimes customary to brand them as vagabonds and bore a hole in their ears with an awl, that the citizens might thus be forewarned. "And who knows," the clergyman added, "but that it is a survival of an endeavor to hide this mark of indignity that causes some of the men even today to wear their hair long?"

TORGERSON

As news is so scarce it is hard to find.

Knute Haugen of Crookston came out with his family to make this part of the country his home in the future. We are glad to see more coming as this is going to be the finest land in the northwest.

Well, seeding is almost over now. The weather has been fine and the ground is in first class shape for the grain. Here's wishing all a good crop.

Last Monday a big party of neighbors from around here went out north on one of the Halvorson farms and moved the bodies of their dead relatives, who had been buried close to a section line where one of the ditches will go. Reinterment was made in the cemetery at C. Dallen's.

Anton Knudson made a trip to the County seat last Thursday.

Olaf Peterson, east of here in Beltrami county is one of the happiest men in the state now he has his new well, as for nine long winters he has had to melt snow all winter long for his stock. Good for Olaf.

August Knudson is going to try his luck now as he also is out of water and others will be if it doesn't rain very soon.

The wolves must be hungry around here this year as they have taken two lambs from August Knudson.

Herman Tollefson has moved out here for good and we hear he has a team of horses now and will start farming operations on a good big scale.

Anton Olson of the town of Star is also going to start farming. Come, girls, there is now room for two of you.

C. Johnson finished all of his seeding but some flax on the N. T. Jorgenson place Saturday of last week.

Loggerheads.

The giant turtles which are found along the Atlantic coast and frequently in southern waters in great numbers are known as loggerheads. They commonly attain a weight of 1,600 pounds, are rapid swimmers and are often seen far from land, floating asleep upon the waves. Carnivorous by nature, these huge tortoises feed on crabs and fish, especially on a large species of conch, which they break open with their massive jaws. The flesh of this terrapin is leathery and oily, with a strong smell of musk. Young specimens are more palatable and are often on sale in the markets.

A duck as large as our goose, which is native of the shores of Tierra del Fuego and the Falkland isles, is also called loggerhead, from its seeming stupidity and helplessness.

In the West Indies this name is also given to two or three sorts of fly catchers.

Where a King's Clothes Were Kept.

St. Andrew's-by-the-Wardrobe is a conspicuous waymark in Queen Victoria street and derives a grotesque distinguishing title from former proximity to the king's great wardrobe. This was originally the town mansion of Sir John Beauchamp and purchased from his executors by Edward III. for the keepers of the king's apparel. "There were kept," says Fuller, "the ancient clothes of our English kings which they wore on great festivals." Shakespeare in his will left to his favorite daughter, Susannah, the Warwickshire doctor's wife, a house near the Wardrobe, "wherein one John Robinson dwelleth." The present Church of St. Andrew's-by-the-Wardrobe was rebuilt by Wren after the great fire and became the city center of the evangelical revival under William Romaine.—Westminster Gazette.

A Challenge Trollope Declined.

The late George Smith, the English publisher, tells in his reminiscences how Anthony Trollope when offered £2,000 for a serial stood out for another £1,000 and finally suggested a toss for the amount in dispute. "I asked him if he wished to ruin me and said that if my banker heard of my tossing authors for their copyright he would certainly close my account. We ultimately came to an agreement on my terms, which were sufficiently liberal. But I felt uncomfortable; I felt mean; I had refused a challenge. To relieve my mind I said: 'Now, that is settled. If you will come over the way to my club, where we can have a little room to ourselves for five minutes, I will toss you for £1,000 with pleasure.' Mr. Trollope did not accept the offer."

A Competent School Official.

There was a quarrel among the school board men once in an Essex town, and an official from London was sent down to settle it. The official gathered the board about him. He said he would hear the chairman first.

"What, Mr. Chairman," he began, "was the cause of this quarrel?"

"Well, ye see, sir," said the chairman, "we had an argyment over spellin', and I wrote—to"—

"You're a liar!" broke in another board man. "You can't write!"

STEINER SCHOOL NOTES

Hattie Koglin visited our school this afternoon.

Louise Meyer and Johnnie Steiner have been absent from school this week on account of work.

Sarah Swanson was absent from school Monday.

Monday was a day for May baskets and we were surprised by seeing some at the school house.

Friday afternoon was spent in cleaning the school yard and we had a half holiday instead of having it on Arbor Day, which was the 21st of April.

We are glad to see the work of leveling the grade begun as we will no longer have our school yard cut up and tramped down by being converted into a public highway.

Parties who have excluded us from playing on premises outside the school yard should remember that public property does not mean public grounds. We are inclined to reverse the old saying "Do as you would be done by," into "Do to others as they do unto you."

The County examinations held last week passed off better than had been expected. Out of thirty papers twenty-eight were forwarded to the county and we are almost sure of four graduates.

August Koglin has been absent from school this week on account of work.

Half an hour every afternoon is spent in reading by Miss Johnson. We are all very much interested in learning the fate of Chad Buford in "The Little Sheperd of Kingdom Come," and like him even better than we did Ranold in "The Man from Glengarry."

R. F. D. No. 1.

Arthur Skogren died at his home in the town of Norden, Thursday, April 27th, after less than four days of illness.

It came as a sudden shock to the whole community, as he was well and active as usual only a few days before. He was still in his youth, being at his death just 18 years, 2 months and 29 days of age. He was a bright lad, always kind and pleasant in his associations and well liked by all. We shall not endeavor to pen the sad pang and great loss his early departure caused to his many devoted friends. We extend our deepest sympathy to the bereaved parents, and may this be their consolation—"not lost but gone before." The funeral was conducted from the home Sunday at 2 o'clock p. m., Rev. O. Anderson officiating. A large number of friends and neighbors had gathered to show their respect, and share in the sorrow of the bereaved. The remains were laid to rest in the Park Ridge cemetery.

A confirmation was held in the Synod church Sunday and the following young people were confirmed: Clara Pederson, Oliver Running, Henry Olson and Arthur Mossestad.

SPRING BRINGS SORE FEET HERE IS A POSITIVE CURE

With the advent of warm weather comes foot troubles to thousands of people. The increased temperature and heaviness of the atmosphere causes swelling and excess perspiration. This brings on a series of foot troubles. The treatment given below will be welcomed with joy by an army of sufferers. It acts like magic. "Dissolve two tablespoonfuls of Calocide compound in a basin of hot water; soak the feet in this for full fifteen minutes, gently massaging the sore parts. Less time will not give the desired results.). Repeat this each night until the cure is permanent." All soreness disappears immediately. Corns and callouses can be peeled right off. Bunions are reduced to normal and the inflammation drawn out. Sweaty and smelly feet, tender and swollen feet need but a few treatments. This Calocide is a remarkable drug. Formerly used only by doctors but any druggist now has it in stock or will quickly get it from his wholesale house. A twenty-five cent package is claimed to cure the worst feet.

A Burning Glass In the Eye.

In the front part of each of our eyes is a convex lens of great power and clearness. It acts exactly like a burning glass. If a person was made to look at the sun, say, for half a minute his eye would actually start to burn up. The lens would focus the rays of the sun on the retina, and that part of the eye would immediately scorch and later would burn to a crisp. This can happen, however, only when one looks at the sun directly or in a mirror. If one holds a pin between the sun and the eye and looks at the pin, although the sun is in a direct line with the eye and although its rays are entering the eye, the eye is not hurt, because the rays are not focused inside the eyeball. This is the wonderful property the lens has, that of focusing objects at different distances. The means by which it does this are its power to change its curvature.—Chicago Record-Herald.

An Election Story From Hungary.

An electioneering story from Hungary, as told by Mr. R. W. Seton-Watson in "Corruption and Reform in Hungary;" "Not many years ago a noble count stood as candidate for a west Hungarian constituency and was in due course elected. Soon afterward a deputation of the electors visited him in Budapest, reminded him of his promises at the time of the election and asked him to use his influence in a certain direction. 'Why do you come to me?' asked the count. 'Why, because you are our representative,' the astonished peasants replied. 'Nothing of the kind,' said the count. 'I bought the constituency for £2,000. You all had your price—free lunches and free drinks into the bargain. I'm —— if I do anything for you. We are quits.' And in another minute the deputation found itself in the street."

Robespierre's Style of Dress.

Robespierre's manner of dress, even at the period when the demagogues affected the slovenliness and disorder of indigence in order to flatter the people, was clean, decent and precise as that of a man who respects himself in the eyes of others. His white powdered hair, turned up in clusters over his temples; a bright blue coat buttoned over his hips, open over the breast to display a white vest; short yellow colored breeches, white stockings and shoes with silver buckles, formed his invariable costume during the whole of his public life. It was said that he desired by thus never varying the style or color of his garments to make the same impression in the sight and imagination of the people as a medal of his face would have caused.—Lamartine's "History of the Girondists."

A Taste For Soap.

Surely one of the queerest of tastes was that of the historian Prescott, of whose life in Rome Mrs. Hugh Fraser tells in "A Diplomatist's Wife In Many Lands." She says that he used to keep a cake of soap on his writing table and nibble at it constantly, saying, when he was remonstrated with, that people should be clean inside as well as out."

Most Important.

George—What can be the matter? The telegram says, "Come home at once." I must fly.

George (as he arrives home two hours later)—What on earth is the matter, dearest?

Young Wife—The baby said "Dada!"—Exchange.

ASK EXTENSION OF PEACE ZONE

Citizens of Coahuila Appeal to General Madero.

REBELS CONTINUE ACTIVE

Unconfirmed Reports in Circulation That Durango Has Fallen Into the Hands of Insurrectos and That Attacks Are Imminent Upon Two Other Important Places Serve to Increase Feeling of Apprehension at Mexico City.

El Paso, Tex., May 2.—Coincident with the arrival in the Madero camp of advices from insurrecto leaders telling of rebel activity in various places in the state of Coahuila, particularly near Monterey, appeals were received by Francisco I. Madero, Jr., from citizens of Monterey for an extension of the armistice zone to that region.

General Madero said he would await specific information from his chiefs as to the position of their forces before making any decision.

The peace commissioners appointed by the revolutionists were in conference for several hours with the political leaders of the insurrection on the program to be presented to the federal peace envoy, Senor Francisco Carabajal.

It is understood that several changes were made in the revolutionist program. The method of selecting provisional governors for various states occupied much of the day. The exact number of states in which the revolutionists will demand the right to name governors has not been agreed upon.

Favor Only Capable Men.

They will make it plain, however, that they do not insist on placing in power men who have taken an active part in the revolution. They are said to favor capable men who are in sympathy with the political principles of the insurgents and at the same time popular enough to tranquillize their states.

The rebels will insist, however, on one radical change from the procedure hitherto followed in the appointment of governors. The candidates submitted or the men chosen must be natives or long time residents of the state in which they are candidates and on the expiration of their terms a free election shall be held.

After the selection of provisional governors shall have been made and the electoral laws revised, according to the insurgent program, a general election shall be called to choose a president.

The exact time of President Diaz' resignation has been avoided in the discussions chiefly because the revolutionists believe he will resign after peace is restored.

It is agreed, however, that the selection of a provisional president will not affect the putting into operation of reform in the separate states. Senor de la Barra, minister of foreign affairs, is the professed favorite of the rebels for provisional president.

DURANGO IN REBELS' HANDS

Rumors of Attacks Create Apprehension in Mexico City.

Mexico City, May 2.—Unconfirmed reports that Durango, the capital of the state of that name, had fallen into the hands of the rebels, and rumors that attacks were to be made soon upon Cuernavaca and Puebla, two other state capitals south of Mexico City, have served to increase the feeling of apprehension here. The big bridge at San Juan del Rio, south of Queeretaro on the line of the Mexican Central, was blown out and the destruction of a number of small wooden bridges on the line of the National north of San Luis Potosi has seriously interrupted traffic on the Laredo route. These will be cribbed, but the activity now being displayed by the bridge destroying force of the rebels gives no assurances that the management of the railways will be permitted to operate trains regularly.

CAPTURE A PACIFIC PORT

Topolobampo Said to Be in Hands of Rebels.

Douglas, Ariz., May 2.—The capture of the important Pacific coast port of Topolobampo, in the state of Sinaloa, Mex., by rebels was reported here. This port is but a short distance from the cities of Fuerte and San Blas, recently taken by the insurrectos.

MAZATLAN ATTACK REPULSED

Mexico City, May 2.—Assisted by the guns and marines of the gunboat Tampico, Colonel Jose Beltran repulsed the rebels who attacked Mazatlan, according to reports received at the department of war.

"'Well, ain't I your father?'

"'I s'pose you are, but a feller don't want it thrown up to him right in front of a crowd.'"—Boston Traveler.

FRANKLIN MACVEAGH.

Dismissed Collector Sues Secretary of the Treasury.

MACVEAGH SUED FOR $100,000

Dismissed Customs Collector Brings Action to Recover Damages.

Chicago, May 2.—Franklin MacVeagh, secretary of the treasury, was made defendant in a suit for $100,000 damages filed by Charles F. Leach, former collector of customs at Cleveland. Mr. Leach charges that following his dismissal from office March 10, 1911, by President Taft, Secretary MacVeagh, in a statement, charged that Leach had turned over to importers thousands of dollars' worth of woolens before the customs were paid, that the importers had been allowed to store the woolens in their own warehouse before duty payment and that he had been guilty of other breaches of the treasury department rules.

DESTRUCTIVE FIRE SWEEPS BANGOR

One-third of Maine City Is Consumed by Flames.

Bangor, Me., May 1.—One-third of the city of Bangor is in ruins, thousands of persons are homeless and a property loss estimated at $6,000,000 was sustained as the result of a fire which raged for hours.

Starting in a hay shed on Broad street the fire swept along Broad and Exchange streets through the heart of the city, leaving residences, churches, schools, business blocks and all the public buildings, with the exception of the city hall, a mass of smoking ashes.

For many hours the firemen of Bangor, assisted by men and apparatus from other Maine cities, battled against the blaze before they conquered it. Dynamiting proved of little avail. Buildings were blown up, but the flames easily leaped the chasms thus made, and it was not until the wind, which had been blowing almost a gale, shifted and a light rain fell that the flames were checked.

Three lives are known to have been lost, although the names of none of the victims are known.

DR. HYDE RELEASED ON BAIL

Circuit Court Admits Reasonable Doubt of His Guilt.

Kansas City, April 27.—Dr. B. C. Hyde, under a life sentence of imprisonment for the murder of Colonel Thomas H. Swope, was released from the county jail on a writ of habeas corpus granted by the seven judges of the circuit court here.

In the opinion of the court the majority of the evidence on which the physician was convicted was circumstantial and there was a reasonable doubt of the prisoner's guilt. The opinion also takes into consideration the fact that Judge Ralph S. Latshaw, trial judge, had once admitted Dr. Hyde to bond.

After the reading of the decision the bail of Dr. Hyde, was set at $50,000.

POSTAL BANKS A SUCCESS.

System Will Now Be Extended to Cities of More Than 10,000.

Washington, April 30.—The forty eight experimental offices of the postal bank system "have made good," it was announced at the postoffice department.

The result, it was stated, would be a speedy extension of the system to large cities.

Thus far depositories have been located only in cities with less than 10,000 population.

Hot Springs, Ark., April 30.—Former United States Senator A. B. Kittredge, of South Dakota, who is critically ill at a local hotel, spent a restless night and there is no noticeable change in his condition.

Attending physicians entertain no hope for the patient's recovery. His weakness is more pronounced and his physicians say that the end is approaching.

OPPOSE TAKING DUTY OFF WOOL

Position of Five Democrats on Ways and Means Committee.

MAY CAUSE SERIOUS SPLIT

Speaker Clark, Chairman Underwood and Other Conservative Democrats Favor Reducing the Duty on Raw Wool, but Believe a Serious Blunder Would Be Made if the Material Were Placed on the Free List.

Washington, May 2.—Representative Hammond of Minnesota is one of five Democratic members of the committee on ways and means who are assisting Speaker Clark in his effort to prevent the Democratic house from going on record in favor of admitting raw wool free of duty. A situation has developed in connection with the proposed wool bill that may cause a serious split in the ranks of the Democrats of the house.

Conservative Democrats, among them Chairman underwood and Mr. Hammond, are bitterly hostile to the suggestion that the wool bill soon to be reported shall place the raw produce on the free list.

While Speaker Clark has not up to date attempted to dictate to the leaders or the house members in matters of legislation he is taking a live interest in the deliberations of the ways and means committee over the wool bill. He has expressed the opinion to members of the committee that the Democratic house will make a serious blunder if it passes a bill containing a free raw wool provision.

Messrs. Clark and Underwood have pointed out to the majority of the committee that if a Democratic house commits itself to free raw wool that Ohio, Indiana, Nebraska and other wool growing states, which are now veering toward Democracy, will be lost to the party in the next presidential election.

Unwise to Admit Wool Free.

They have argued further that raw wool is a big revenue producer and that it would be unwise from an economic standpoint to admit the product duty free until measures have been evolved that would furnish revenue to take the place of that now yielded by raw wool.

It became known that it is the purpose of the Democratic leaders to permit the debate on the free list bill to run along indefinitely. The original plan was to pass the bill this week and then report the wool bill. Owing to the differences of opinion on raw wool, which now appear to be irreconcilable, it has been decided to forego action on the wool bill for a time. The indications are, therefore, that the wool bill will not make its appearance for two weeks or more.

In the meantime the leaders will pray with the Democratic membership and they are hopeful that in due season they will be able to bring a sufficient number of them into line to warrant taking up the wool schedule in a party caucus.

The present rate on raw wool amounts to about 35 per cent ad valorem. It was said that the speaker and Chairman Underwood favor a compromise rate ranging somewhere around 25 per cent. The Wool Growers' association has advised the Democratic leaders that the adoption of less than 25 per cent would be fatal to the industry.

DENNETT TO DECIDE CASES

Land Commissioner Will Hear Alaskan Coal Claims.

Washington, May 2.—Secretary of the Interior Fisher agreed to sit with Commissioner Dennett of the general land office and member of the law board in the hearing of the so called Cunningham cases, involving the right to certain coal claims in Alaska, here next Monday. The decision, which will be rendered after the hearing, will be that of Commission Dennett. Secretary Fisher purposes to prevent the repetition of labor and expense incident to presenting the cases should it be decided to appeal to him from the decision of Commissioner Dennett.

Attorney E. C. Hughes of Seattle, for the claimants, in suggesting this course, wrote to Secretary Fisher that "public interest demands as speedy a determination of this controversy as may be consistent with justice and with the orderly dispatch of the business of your department."

Miner Falls 240 Feet.

Calumet, Mich., May 2.—Trying to save the life of a comrade Jacob Karppinen, aged twenty-eight, a miner at the Quincy mine, fell from a ladder a distance of 240 feet and was fatally injured. His companion fell through an earth mill and was badly injured.

Porter Shoots Policeman.

Davenport, Ia., May 2.—Fred Smith, colored, a porter in a barber shop, shot Henry Jansen, a patrolman of the Davenport police force, through the neck. Jansen will die. Smith escaped. The officer had arrested the negro for disturbing the peace.

The Last Luxury.

Ten-year-old Arthur had been telling impressively of the number of servants employed in his home. He continued, "And our house is fixed so that if you want a drink or a window raised or to go upstairs or anything all you have to do is to pull a chain."

"But what do you want with so many servants in that sort of house?" asked one of his hearers.

"Oh," replied Arthur, "we have the servants to pull the chains."—Judge.

NEW YORK CITY WILL HAVE BIG LAND SHOW

J. J. Hill Offers $1,000 Prize Cup For Best Wheat

At last, New York is going to have a land show. There has never been a land show in New York City—there has never even been a world's fair. But, starting the morning of November 3rd and ending the evening of November 12th, 1911, there will be one of the biggest and best land shows in famous Madison Square Garden, New York City, that the world has ever seen—the American Land and Irrigation Exposition.

New York City is the largest port of entry for immigrants in the world—over one million (1,000,000) foreigners come to New York every year. Think of it—a million a year! Most of them are farmers—some of them are better farmers than we are. This big land show will get most of these hard-working people "back to the land."

It would be of tremendous benefit to the Northwest if some of these people could be induced to move out on the farms, and either buy land, if they have the means, or work for the Northwestern farmers until they get sufficient money to purchase farms of their own, as the Germans and Scandinavians did a generation ago. Instead of doing this, these people work for small wages in overcrowded, congested centers like New York City. They do not know about the opportunities of the Northwest.

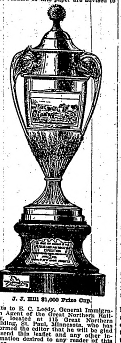
All the readers of this paper are asked to do this—to compete for the valuable J. J. Hill prize or one of the other many prizes offered. Canada, the South, the Southwest, North, Northwest and East will all exhibit and show their best grains, fruits and other farm products. It is very necessary that the Northwest should make a showing better than that of any other section, so that the better class of these immigrants, and of the thousands of native Americans, in and around New York City, who have the means to buy farms but do not understand the possibilities of the Great Northwest, will come to our section, instead of the others. Then the prizes are extremely valuable and are well worth while.

J. J. Hill Prize Cup

James J. Hill, Chairman of the Board of Directors of the Great Northern Railway, offers a $1,000 prize cup, five feet high and elaborately engraved, for the best 100 pounds of wheat raised in the United States—in 1911—and exhibited by the actual grower at the American Land and Irrigation Exposition.

The conditions are easy, and any farmer in the United States stands a good chance to win this $1,000 cup. It would be a great honor and a wonderful advertisement to this locality if this cup were won by one of the readers of this paper—if it were won by you.

The Great Northern Railway has always been ready to co-operate with any sincere effort to make the Northwest and the Northwestern farmer more prosperous. They have issued a handsome four page leaflet printed in two colors with an illustration showing the James J. Hill $1,000 prize cup. This leaflet tells all about the conditions governing this and other prize contests. The readers of this paper are advised to write to E. C. Leedy, General Immigration Agent of the Great Northern Railway, located at 115 Great Northern Building, St. Paul, Minnesota, who has informed the editor that he will be glad to send this leaflet and any other information desired to any reader of this paper.



J. J. Hill $1,000 Prize Cup.

REFUSES TO SEE LABOR COUNSEL

Ortie E. McManigal Ignores Lawyers for Defense.

CONFIRMATION IS LACKING

Persistent Rumors in Circulation That McManigal Has Made a Complete Confession.

Los Angeles, Cal., April 29.—Although it has been reported for several days that a confession had been made in the dynamite conspiracy case no official confirmation was forthcoming, but Ortie E. McManigal's actions tended to confirm the belief that he would not accept help from the union attorneys who are to defend the McNamaras, joint defendants in the Times explosion case.

He declined to see Attorney Job Harriman, former Socialist candidate for vice president and counsel for the McNamara brothers.

District Attorney Fredericks had said that the prisoner would see none of the lawyers associated with the defense and McManigal later confirmed this personally to Harriman at the jail.

Harriman upon emerging from the sheriff's office declared that John J. McNamara and his brother James are now the only ones in whose behalf the defense would center its efforts.

The only visitors McManigal willingly receives are men from the district attorney's office, Sheriff Hammel and operatives of the detective agency that rounded up the alleged conspirators in the [illegible]

HAS HARRY ORCHARD FEATURE

Dynamite Case Very Similar to Famous Idaho Trial.

Los Angeles, Cal., April 29.—When the curtain arose on the third day's scenes and incidents connected with the imprisonment and impending trial of the alleged dynamiters, John J. McNamara, James B. McNamara and Ortie McManigal, the true outlines of the great criminal case began to assume definite form.

The all prominent feature is the confession which McManigal is reported to have made, first to Detective W. J. Burns in Chicago and then in more complete form to District Attorney Fredericks here.

What are claimed to be extracts from this latest confession have been published, but from all official sources the word has been given out that none of these is authorized or authentic.

The case is assuming more and more the aspects of the case of Moyer, Haywood and Pettibone at Boise City. Even the "Harry Orchard" feature promises to be repeated almost in duplicate.

The men out include 2,500 railroad men, 2,500 brickmakers, 6,000 in the building trades, 600 marble workers and 700 in miscellaneous small unions.

RAISING STRAWBERRIES

The best time to set a strawberry bed is the early spring, as soon as the land is in good condition and the plants can be obtained. There is more moisture as a rule at that time, and this, combined with the cool weather of spring, gives better growing conditions than August planting. Plants may also be set in the fall, if extra attention and care are given them. It does not pay to set the plants in dry soil or in a dry season, unless plenty of water for irrigation purposes is available.

Strawberries require a rich soil hence it is well to thoroughly manure the land that is to be used for the crop in the fall, and plow under from four to six inches deep. In the spring disc, drag and smooth thoroughly. This gives a loose soil in which to set the plants and a firm sub-soil to hold the moisture, and yet open enough to let the roots through. Any land that will grow a good crop of corn will grow strawberries. Sod land should never be used if it can be prevented, as it is likely to contain grubs and cut-worms, which will eat off the roots of newly-set plants. A northern slope is to be preferred, as the plants do not start so early in the spring. They thus escape the early frosts and they are not so likely to be dried out by the hot south and southwest winds at fruiting time.

Plants having a small crown, and a large number of white fibrous roots, are best for planting. It is not a good plan to use plants that have borne fruit as they are weaker. The best plants are obtained from plantations that have not been allowed to fruit. Their roots are white, while the roots of the old plants are brown. Before planting, all dead leaves should be removed. The roots should be pruned back to about 3 or 4 inches. All flowers shold be kept off the plants the first season, as this provides a stronger growth. It is best to get the plants from a nurseyman or strawberry specialist, as they are not as likely to be mixed as when obtained from a neighbor.

There are two classes of strawberries, known as staminate and pistillate, or perfect and imperfect varities. The staminate or perfect varities all have well-developed organs of the flower. These varities, as a rule will bear fruit when planted by themselves. The pistillate varities have only the pistils or female part of the flower. In order for these to bear fruit, it is necessary that perfect or staminate varities be planted near them. Usually, where pistillate and staminate. Planted in this way, the pistillate varities very often bear more fruit than the staminate. There is no way of distinguishing the difference between these varities when not in flower, although there are certain characteristics of plant-growth that may enable one very familiar with the strawberry to distinguish varities.

There are several methods of planting in general use, which may be modified to suit the planter. The method in common use, and which seems best adapted to Minnesota conditions, is the matted row system. In the spring, when the land is in good condition to work, harrow smooth, and mark out rows four feet apart and as long as possible. Then set the plants at 18 or 24 inch intervals in the rows, and cultivate often enough to keep the weeds out and the soil loose until September; when, if the plants are vigorous growers, the runners should be about 6 inches apart. It is desirable to train the runners the long way of the rows cutting out plants that crowd. An ordinary planting trowel or spade is used to set the plants. A spade is an easy implement to open the ground with. Strike it into the ground and work it back and forth, draw out the spade, spread the roots of the plant, and set it so the crown comes just to the surface of the ground. Firm the soil well about the roots of the plant. This method requires a man to handle the spade and a boy to set the plants. As soon as possible after setting the plants, cultivation should commence, and it should continue at frequent inervals till fall. Keep the weeds down and the top soil loose. If the runners get too thick, cut out part of them, leaving about 6 inches between them. Runners may be encouraged to root by putting an inch or two of soil over each one, near the end.—Le Roy Cady, University Farm

GERMS IN HER SYSTEM.

Every Woman Should Read This Advice and the Generous Offer That Goes With It.

The number of diseases peculiar to women is such that we believe this space would hardly contain a mere mention of their names, and it is a fact that most of these diseases are of a catarrhal nature. A woman cannot be well if there is a trace of catarrh in her system.

Some women think there is no help for them. We positively declare this to be a mistaken idea. We are so sure of this that we offer to supply medicine absolutely free of all cost in every instance where it fails to give satisfaction, or does not substantiate our claims. With this understanding, no woman should hesitate to believe our honesty of purpose, or hesitate to put our claims to a test.

There is only one way to overcome catarrh. That way is through the blood. You may use all the snuffs, douches or like remedies for years without getting more than temporary relief at best. Catarrh in general is a diseased condition of the system that shows locally most frequently in discharges from mucous membranes. Local treatment should be assisted by internal treatment for the general diseased condition if a complete cure is to be reached. That internal treatment should be scientifically devised and faithfully administered.

Rexall Mucu-Tone is scientifically prepared from the prescription of an eminent physician who for thirty years made catarrh his specialty. This remedy is admirably adapted to the treatment of the catarrhal ailments of women. It purifies and enriches the blood, tends to stop mucous discharges, aids in removing impurities from the system, soothes, heals and strengthens the mucous tissues, and brings about a feeling of health and strength.

We want you to try Rexall Mucu-Tone on our guarantee. If you are not benefited, or for any reason not satisfied, simply tell us and we will hand back your money. Rexall Mucu-Tone comes in two sizes, 50 cents and $1.00. Remember, you can obtain Rexall Remedies only at—The Rexall Store.

A Neat Trick

By JEROME WILLIAMSON

Copyright by American Press Association, 1911.

When railroads were first built the car was a string of stagecoaches joined together. We in America at the very beginning abandoned this form and opened the car from end to end. In Europe they still retain the stagecoach pattern. Their coaches are built in compartments, though those on through trains are connected by a passage at one side. Their way trains are the same as they were some eighty years ago.

I was traveling one day in a way train and locked in a compartment with one other passenger, a young woman. Soon after the train started she asked if she might smoke a cigarette. When a compartment is used for smoking over there they put up a notice to that effect. I felt pleased that she was a smoker herself, granted her permission at once and drew forth a cigar.

"You must first have a whiff with me," she said, "then you may smoke your cigar." She handed me an open box of cigarettes. "These are something very fine. Try one."

I accepted the offer. The woman turned away from me to put the box back in the satchel from which she had taken it and took a cigarette for herself while her back was toward me so that I couldn't see her doing it. I lighted mine and as soon as I began to smoke felt a delicious languor. I should have suspected that something was wrong and thrown the weed away, but I was enraptured and soon fell into a delicious trance.

The woman kept her eyes on me and presently asked me to hand her a novel she had left on the seat beside me. I couldn't move even a finger. She had evidently expected as much and had asked me to hand her the book to see if I were able to do so. As soon as she was satisfied that I was powerless she took off her dress and hat and threw them out of the window. There was a man's costume underneath the dress, and it was evident that the pretended woman was a man. He took a felt hat out of his bag and put it on, then, taking a paper out of his coat pocket, he put it in mine.

All this was done between two stations about ten miles apart, although the train went pretty slow. When we reached the second station the man got out of the train, leaving me still powerless. I was just as conscious of the situation as if I had not inhaled the cigarette. I surmised that the man was a criminal fleeing from justice and had put papers in my pocket that would cause his pursuers to think that I was the man they were looking for. Why he wished them to think so I fancied to be because they were hot on the pursuit and he wished to gain time by throwing them off the track.

The train seemed to be delayed in starting again. It appeared to me that it must be waiting for something. What was my horror to see several men come to the door of the compartment led by the man who had drugged me.

"That's the man," he said.

The effect of the cigarette had passed off sufficiently to enable me to protest. But the man interrupted me.

"I tell you," he said to the others, "he's the notorious Cartouche, who a day or two ago escaped the French police. I saw him in court once and knew him the moment he entered the train. If you don't believe me search him. He may have something that will identify him on his person."

My blood ran cold. I knew of Cartouche, who was under sentence of death. I was ordered out of the coach, but as I had not recovered the use of my limbs they were obliged to pull me out. They placed me on a baggage roller and went through my pockets. A letter addressed to Jaques Cartouche was found on me. At that moment the train pulled out and my accuser, jumping on the footboard, went off with it.

I was taken to the town jail. On the arrival of the next train police officers arrived. The moment they saw me they knew they had been tricked. I told them my story, and they knew by my description of my accuser that he was Cartouche himself. But the train on which they came had gone on and they were obliged to wait for the next to get on in the chase.

I considered myself lucky to escape as easily as I did, for the police believed my story, saying that it was just like Cartouche, who had played that and similar games before.

By a very singular coincidence I saw Cartouche again, though some years later. I returned to America. On the steamer I found the stern fenced off with canvas. There was an opening between the canvas and an after cabin through which I could look into that portion of the deck which had been fenced off for the use of the steerage passengers. While looking through this aperture who should I see but a man whom I immediately recognized as Cartouche.

I was sorry I had seen him, for I felt it incumbent on me to prevent his landing in America. Had he been going the other way I should have held my peace. But as a criminal coming to my own country my duty as a citizen was to inform the immigrant commissioners of his identity. On reaching New York I told my story and the criminal was sent back to the port from which he sailed. What became of him after his return I don't know, but he was smart enough to cheat the gallows more than once, and he may have used another as he used me.

The Peculiar Sand Fly.

The sand fly is perfectly harmless. It does not bite. It has no sting. It cannot even eat. All it can do is to flit about for a few hours, enjoy the light of day or the glare of an electric lamp. The sand fly is known to scientists familiarly as the May fly. In scientific terms it is called ephemerida. This name is taken from the Greek word ephemeros, which means lasting only for a day. To the scientists the sand fly is one of the most interesting and beautiful of insects. The fly lives but a day at most, but before it sees the light it has lived from one to three years under the water in the form of what the scientists call a nymph. The nymph can both walk and swim. As it grows it molts, and after about the ninth molt tiny wings appear on its thorax. These grow larger until the insect comes forth from the water a sand fly. It then has but one duty—to lay its eggs. This done, the sand fly zigzags through the air until its brief life is ended.

Not In That Class.

A Cleveland young woman has a ten year-old brother who is wise beyond his years and is likely to crop out in new places at the most unexpected times. The other night the anxious suitor called on his inamorata, arriving at her domicile a little before he was expected. She was not ready to make her appearance, and the duty of entertaining the caller devolved upon the little brother.

"Well, Bobby," began the young man in an effort to make conversation and at the same time to put his involuntary host at his ease, "does your sister think that I am calling at this house oftener than I am welcome?"

The child looked keenly at the caller.

"Nothing doing," he said. "Do you think I'm one of these fresh kids you read about in the funny papers? There ain't going to be no embarrassing answer this time." — Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Even Tempered.

"Is your husband even tempered?"

"Yes," answered Mrs. Wurryd, "he's even tempered enough. He's just about as irritable one day as another."

Some people are so fond of ill luck that they run half way to meet it.—Jerrold.

THE PURPOSE OF ALL IS THE PROGRESS OF HUMANITY

VOL. XXII, THIEF RIVER FALLS, MINNESOTA, FRIDAY, MAY 12, 1911. NO 38

COAST LINE THRU T. R. F.

Indications Point Strongly to a Speedy Culmination of a Press Prophecy.

Through transcontinental service over the Canadian Pacific, Duluth, South Shore & Atlantic, and Soo line, via Montreal, Sault Ste. Marie Duluth-Superior, Thief River Falls, and either the Winnipeg or Kenmare-Portal routes, is reported to be an eventual plan behind the placing yesterday by the Duluth, South Shore & Atlantic of an order for 15,000 tons of steel rails. This is one of the largest rail orders that the steel companies have booked for some time. It means rails enough to relay a large portion of the Duluth, South Shore line, and the practical reconstruction of the road.

The Canadian Pacific controls the Duluth, South Shore & Atlantic thru a majority stock ownership. The smaller road has long made a poor showing in earnings. In the varied reports as to future traffic combinations between the Canadian Pacific, Duluth South Shore & Atlantic, and Soo line that followed the acquisition of the Wisconsin Central road by the Soo, was one that emanated from Montreal, and pointed out the transcontinental traffic possibilities. Compared with the long route across the north end of Lake Superior now maintained by the Canadian Pacific much might be obtained by operation on the south side. It was also reported that a plan to run the through Canadian Pacafic trains from the Soo west via Minneapolis was under consideration.

The later completion of the Thief River Falls line of the Soo line Duluth, and the more recent announcement of the purpose of the Soo to push work this summer on a line from Frederick, Wis., to Duluth, where the Wisconsin Central or Chicago division already enters, makes it clear that important traffic combinnation will work out, with the head of the lakes as the center, and the transcontinental plan of operation via the Duluth South Shore & Atlantic appears more probable.

W. F. Fitch, of Marquette, president of the Duluth, South Shore & Atlantic road was in Minneapolis recently. President Edmund Pennington of the Soo line is out of town today.

The route from eastern Canada to western Canada would be much shorter over the suggested route than on the rails that now run north of Lake Superior. To put the burden of heavy transcontintental traffic upon the Duluth, South Shore & Atlantic would mean practically the entire rehabilitation of the road. It might be necessary also to build cut-offs at several points, but in any case a saving of a milage that would be very important as a time shortening element, could be effected by the southern route rather than that now maintained north of Lake Superior in country that is sparsely settled.—Minneapolis Journal.

A little more than a year ago the Press contained an article which outlined the plan of proposed transcontinental route passing thru our city. Now that the Minneapolis Journal has ventured to make a similar prediction it would appear that even a fool guess made by the editor of this sheet may sometimes be worthy of some credence.

Heavy Hail Storm.

Hail stones as large as snow balls fell between Trail and Oklee Wednesday evening before six o'clock, covering the ground several inches deep, just as the Duluth train was coming west over that territory. The headlight on the engine was broken and three windows on the coaches were smashed. After the hail came a veritable cloud-burst of rain, making rivers of mere ditches, where great masses of floating hail were swept away by torrents of water.

The Post Office Department has finally fixed upon June 15th as the day on which free City Delivery will be inaugurated in Thief River Falls. They have determined the boundaries of the same and named as the condition within those bounds for free delivery that receptacles, or boxes be provided in which the carriers may deposit the mail. The Bear

In the words of the poet "there was tumult i nthe city" when early Friday morning it was reported that the big cinnamon bear then appearing in a vaudeville wrestling act at the Grand here, had forsook the paths of men and returned to the simple life.

Bruin had been the star attraction at the Grand for several days and seemed to enjoy the public attention bestowed upon him. Friday evening Bill Kline was scheduled as his opponent in place of the regular trainer and when Bruin received a slight reprimand Thursday evening it must have been to him a hint of what he would receive at the hands of Kline and following the example of many a human before him when things looked dark for him he quit

GOLDEN WEDDING ANNIVERSARY

Mr. and Mrs. John Dobner Pass Fiftieth Mile stone of Wedded Life

The following item from the Lake City Graphic-Republican will be of interest to many in this city:

Monday, May 1, was the fiftieth anniversary of the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. John Dobner which occurred at New Richmond, Wisconsin, on that date in 1861. A few weeks later they came to Lake City and have made this city their home ever since. Mr. Dobner was 75 last December and his brideof 50 years ago was 67 last November. Both are numbered among the city's most honored and respected citizens and have been the recipients of felicitations from a large circle of friends and acquaintances. The day was spent in a quiet manner, Mr. and Mrs. Dobner being at home to their many friends who called to extend congratulations and best wishes. Members of their immediate family were present including: Mr. and Mrs. L. J. Dobner and children, Edwin, Allen, and Helen of St. Paul; Mr. and Mrs. C. L. Dobner and children, Dorothy, John, and Catherine, of Kalipell, Montana. H. G. Dobner of Thief River Falls, and Mr. and Mrs. J. G. Moore and son, Dobner of La Crosse. May they live to see many more years of wedded bliss is the wish of the city and community.

Development Convention.

Banker C. L. Hanson, who, as a delegate from this part of Minnesota attended theNorthwestern Development convention at Helena, Montana, last week; returned Monday morning and reports having had a most enjoyable and instructive trip. Being asked about the trip by a Press reporter he expressed himself as follows:

"It was a splendid convention made up of prominent men from all sections of the Great Northwest, and will undoubtedly be productive and of great results in time. Personally I took a great deal of interest in the convention, and also in the trip going to Helena and returning. Our train stopped at a number of the towns along the line, and at every stop, I made it my business to inquire, so far as possible, from local parties, regarding the local conditions, such as the prices and productiveness of the soil, and other resources. I saw and heard nothing on the entire trip that did not tend to convince me that northern Minnesota and especially the territory tributary to Thief River Falls, offers far better opportunities to the home-seekrs and investors today than any part of the country that we traversed. Not only are these opportunities better here at present, but it seems to me they always must be better because we have so many natural advantages, that do not exist in the west. We have more productive soil, more abundant average rainfall, greater diversity of products, and far better and closer markets."

"I want to have you say for me that I very much appreciated the courtesies of Mr. Louis W. Hill. I want to lay special emphasis on the fact that he is "A Prince of Good Fellows"; that there is no man more alive to the immense opportunities of the Northwest than he is; nor is there any one more willing to "boost" those opportunities, and improve conditions; however, I wish that the delegates from Minnesota had all been farmers from northern Minnesota, instead of business men, jobbers and politicians. If it had been such a delegation of farmers, I know that every one of them would have returned to their Minnesota homes fully convinced that their present location was of the best, and satisfied that right here in northern Minnesota ideal conditions exist for industrious people to be both happy and prosperous."

F. E. Stillwell and F. H. Talbot, two of the students from Fargo College spoke to the High School students Tuesday urging the consideration of the merits of Fargo College when a selection for college training was to be made. Thief River Falls is already represented at that institution as the Misses Clara and Myrtle Blanchard, Avis Akre and Wm. Rinkenare registered among the students there. Miss Clara Blanchard will complete her course this year.

New Tax on Money and Credit.

The late legislature in the last days of the session passed a new tax law relating to the taxation of Money and Credits. Formerly moneys and credits have been taxed the same as other property, but now the rate has been reduced to three tenths of one per cent or $3.00 a thousand, which is so low a tax rate that no good citizen will seek to avoid it.

"Money" as defined in the law means money owned by the party assessed, whether in his possession or on deposit, or wherever it may be; and "credits", covers all book accounts, bills receivable, promissory notes, bonds, annuities, and all other claims and demands for money or other valuable things. The law, however, does not cover money, notes and bonds owned by incorporated banks in this state, or notes and bonds secured by real estate mortgages recorded in this state on which the registery tax has been paid; nor does it cover Municipal bonds issued since April 18th of the present year.

The assessment is to be made at the fair cash value of the property and not at a percentage of such value. Under the law, debts owing by the party cannot be deducted from the money or credit owned by him.

Taxpayers will be furnished by the assessor with listing blanks on which to make full return of all moneys and credits as required by this law.

The law was passed by the legislature in good faith to relieve intolerable conditions and is entitled to a fair trial, and it is sincerely to be hoped that all will put their shoulders to the wheel and help make it a success.

Rural School Notes

Our rural schools are now for the most part closed. Only a few districts having spring terms and the State Aid schools are yet in session,—and these schools will close in six or eight weeks.

There are sixty eight organized school districts now in our county and three schools in the unorganized territory. Your Sup't. has visited the greater number of these schools. Attendance has been fairly good and the work well done as evidenced by the interest taken by teacher and pupils in the work.

It is to be hoped that the school work can be so planned in our schools that it becomes progressive and be advanced ever onward to greater proficiency and higher standard. This must be our aim, and to graduate a set of boys and girls from our rural schools must be the result of each year's work.

Bythe hard and thorough work of the teachers in school districts, 219, 25 and 133 and the able supervision of Sup't. H. F. Anderson, we are able to have graduation exercises in these schools this year. These teachers deserve great credit for their work.

Agriculture and domestic sciences are now introduced in our schools. No subject could have a greater educational value for our rural districts. The school boards and we teachers must realize that here is a wide field for inquiry and practical work,—work that will make the school of the greatest benefit to scholars and community alike. The field is a wide one and many sided.

Just now there is an opportunity for the pupils of our rural schools to secure a prize in connection with the Extension Department of the School of Agriculture, St. Anthony Park. Prizes are offered as follows:

The boy or girl who writes the best essay on the subject "Why is Bird Protection Plant Protection" a cash prize of$15.00 willbe given; the 2nd prize $10.00; next ten $5.00 each; next five $3.00 each; next five $2.00; next twenty, honorable mention.

The conditions governing the contest are as follows: "Contest open to all boys and girls in the sixth, seventh and eight grades, living on farms. Essays shall be limited to five hundred words. Originality of thought and observation on the part of the writer shall count more than elegance of English or composition. Essays which show plainly that they have been copied from writings, or written from dictation of a teacher or superintendent, will be rejected; for what is wanted is the thought of the writer, not that of the teacher or school officers. All Essays must be in the hands of the Extension Division on or before November 1, 1911 where they will be judged by the Division of Zoology and Entomology.

Let the boys and girls in our schools take this matter up. Observe nature and study the habit of our birds and see, if you cannot discover something on the subject, stated above, worth writing about. You will be surprised at what you know when you come to write down your thoughts, and will find it difficult to confine your composition to five hundred words. Let the efforts made be your best. FACTORY IN PROSPECT.

A Household Specialties Company may be Secured. Conditions.

Jesse L. Edgren Manufacturing Co., of Milwaukee, Wis., are ready to come and open a factory in Thief River Falls at once, on certain conditions. They would employ about 20 men from the start and would expect to work up to 30 or 40 by the end of the year.

Preliminary investigations, undertaken by the commercial club set them down as honest, energetic and business-like gentlemen.

The conditions on which they stand ready to come are: 1st. A loan of $15,000 on security; and 2nd, a factory building for which, they agree to pay rent until the borrowed debt is repaid, after which they will buy and proceed to pay for the building.

It will thus be seen that they do not ask any kind of bonus or anything else for nothing. They stand ready, like honorable men, to pay for everything they get—rent for the building and interest on the money advanced. They only ask for a lift while they get a footing.

They are manufacturers of household specalities and novelty goods.

It is likely that the executive committee of the commercial club will send a representative to Milwaukee to make an exhaustive investigation and report to the club at its next regular meeting a week from tonight.

Negotiations are also under way with the Alexandria Ascetylene Machine Co., who are manufacturers of an ascetylene lamp that meets the requirements of the insurance underwriter.

• • •

A cracker factory now doing business at Rush City, Minn., is desirous of locating here, but just on what conditions they can be had is not yet known.

• • •

The same is true of a woolen mill from a town in the southern part of the state. Negotiations have not yet proceeded far enough with these so that anything difinite can be given.

• • •

The commercial club has invited, Fred Bartholomew, owner of The Frederick hotel at Grand Forks and a chain of hotels in other towns of the Northwest, to come here and look us over to see if we may not be ripe for one of his kind of hotels.

Guarding Health

As authorized by law, the State Board of Health has issued and published the following regulation, and any violation of them is punishable:

No principle, superintedent, or teacher of any school, and no parent master or guardian of any child or minor, having the power and authority to prevent, shall permit any such child or minor having smallpox, scarlet fever diptheria, measles, chicken pox, tuberculosis influenza tonsilitis, erysipelas, whooping cough, mumps, itch, ringworm or trachoma or any other dangerous communicable disease, or any child residing in any house in which any disease exists, or has recently existed to attend any public, private, parochial church or Sunday school, until the local health officer of the city, village or township shall have given his permission for such attendance.

A school house wherein a child suffering from smallpox, scarlet fever, or diptheria has been present shall be deemed infected, and must be temporarily closed and thoroughly disinfected and cleaned, under the supervision of the local health officer before re-opening of the school. Such disinfection and cleaning shall be done according to directions of the Minnesota State Board of Health, in its circular on disinfection.

All schoolhouses should be inspected from time to time by the local health officer, and if found to be in an unclean or unsanitary condition, said officer shall forthwith order that the place be closed and kept closed, until it has been properly cleaned or disinfeted, or both, as the case may require.

Whenever it is proposed to build a new school house, the plans and specifications for the same, in respect to sanitary conditions, shall be submitted and filed with the Minnesota State Board of Health, and no such building shall be constructed until the sanitary arrangements of the same have been approved by the said board.

MAN COMMITS SUICIDE

Ole O. Bjorge, East of City, Thus Ends Saturday. Dispondency the Cause.

Ole O. Bjorge, who lived east of the city about six miles, committed suicide some time last Saturday by hanging.

Saturday evening when he failed to come home, the family became uneasy, thinking he might have suffered an accident. A searching party was formed at once but night came on with no clue of his whereabouts. Next morning the search was continued and was finally successful. The body was found suspended by a rope from the roof of an old barn about a mile west f his home. How long since life was extinguished no one could tell but some time on Saturday was thought likely.

Deceased some time ago filed on the homestead on which he was living at the time, but a number of contests had been entered against it lately, and it is thought he feared he would lose his land and that it was brooding over this that led to the rash act.

The remains were interred on Monday. Deceased leaves a wife and a number of children to mourn his untimely demise, and they have the sympathy of the entire community in their sad bereavement.

bly the prize will come your way. Do not forget this chance.

This ditch will be dug with scraper and team work and will offer a good comparison between the comparative values of ditches constructed with team work and those constructed with the use of walking dredges.

BOOST FOR MINNESOTA.

Northern Minnesota Development Association Meets June 1 and 2

The Northern Minnesota Development Association will hold their fourth Annual Convention in Duluth June 1st and 2nd, at which time plans will be perfected for carrying on a campaign of education to place before prospective landseekers who are homeseekers as well the advantages of our state, and also to advertise our Northern resources and requirements among our own people. Some of the matters that will come up for discussion are: State Development, Development of State Lands, Conservation of Soil Fertility Land Show in St. Paul, Dec., 1911 Commission plan of State Government, The National Corn Show at Minneapolis, 1912 and other matters that will be of peculiar interest to residents of Northern Minnesota.

The Duluth New Tribune gives the following:

Duluth will be ready; its enthusiasm will be uncorked, and the streets flooded with it; it will have the means of uncorking that of its guests even if it is necessary to break the bottle. Nor need any one fear floundering in the flood the drainage is good.

It is questionable if even those who have done the most to promote this association realize all it has done for Northern Minnesota. The legislation secured at this last session would be enough, but that is merely the incident, though it was the main objective and incentive of the organization.

But beyond this, it has attracted the attention of the entire country to this section. Northern Minnesota has been more talked of, better advertised, since Bemidji than in all the preceeding fifty years.

Every one is ready to help those who are helping themselves; every one is quick to count those who are organized to work together for their common good; every one recognizes the power of united action and admires a people that can get together on a basis of common loyalty.

Confidence needs confidence; boosting begets boosting; enthusiasm is contagious. The Developmnt association is unique as an orgaization. It is the first time that a great part of a great state has joined to work for the common good, and has shown the ability, the wisdom, the good sense and good fellowship to do this in harmony.

Among the organizations who will send delegates are Thirty-four Northern Minnesota County Development Associations, The Wisconsin Association, Upper Michigan Development Association, Western Michigan Development Bureau, and others.

A determined effort is now under way to show those seekinghomes from other states, that our own state holds inducements superior to others, which close proximity to market indicates; the next five years hold great possibilities to those states who are up and doing—Minnesota is the banner Western State and should be in the lead of this great land movement. Duluth is making great preparations to take care of all who will come and the well known hospitality of the Zenith City is the guarantee of a successful meeting. A complete program will be given later. Those who attend will enjoy not only the business of the meeting, but from the social side an especially enjoyable time is anticipated. The St. Louis County Club and the Duluth Commercial Club are arranging side trips on Lake Superior, etc., which will afford an opportunity to fully inspect Minnesota's great lake port with its innumerable steam and other vessels. Several of St. Louis County farm—G. G. Hartley's Island Farm, Jean-Duluth Farm, an dothers—will be visited. Come and BOOST FOR MINNESOTA.

Oregon Constitutional Amendment.

Printed By Request

The people of Oregon in 1902 adopted a constitutional amendment embodying the principle of direct legislation, the vote being 62,024 for, 5,668 against. This amendment is worth careful study on the part of Socialist, firstly, because it is a measure of political democracy in harmony with the Socialist party platform, and, secondly, because we should bring detailed knowledge as well as general principles to bear upon our attitude toward the many attempts being made throughout the United States to amend state constitutions

CRYING FOR HELP
Lots of it in Thief River Falls, But Daily Growing Less.

The kidneys cry for help.

Not an organ in the whole body so delicately constructed.

Not one so important to health.

Backache is one of the first indications of kidney trouble.

If it is the kidneys cry for help it.

Doan's Kidney Pills are what is wanted.

Are just what overworked kidneys need.

They strengthen and invigorate the kidneys; help them to do their work; never fail to cure any case of kidney disease.

DO GHOSTS HAUNT SWAMPS?

No, Never. Its foolish to fear a fancied evil, when there are real and deadly perils to guard against in swamps and marshes, bayous, and lowlands. These are the malaria germs that cause ague, chills and fever weakness, aches in the bones and muscles and may induce deadly typhoid. But Electric Bitters destroys and casts out these vicious germs from the blood. "Three bottles drove all the malaria from my system wrote Wm. Fretwell, of Lucama, N. C., "and I've had fine health ever since." Use this safe, sure remedy only, 50c at all Druggists.

THE CLIMAX

Manager Anderson informs us that he is negotiating with the managers of "The Climax" for a one-night engagement. He says there is little chance of such a company having a date open. BASE BALL

The local team went to Red Lake Falls last Sunday to play the first regular game of the season. The down street men got the bulge on our men during the fore-part of the game and won out 7 to 2.

The game was fast and well played except in the third inning when, with two men out, loose infield playing allowed 4 runs. Red Lake, scored 2 in the first and 1 in the seventh, while our men managed to get 2. Thief River hit the ball frequently, but when hits meant runs the ball always landed in somebody's mitt.

Aasland started on the mound for Thief River and pitched good ball. With proper support not more than one run should have been made. Hess replaced Aasland in the fourth and the team tightened up, playing excellent ball the rest of the game. Garzeau did a fine stroke of pitching for Red Lake Falls and received good support.

SAVED CHILD FROM DEATH.

"After our child had suffered from severe bronchial trouble for a year. "wrote G. T. Richardson, of Richardson's Mills, Ala., "we feared it had consumption. It had a bad cough all the time. Finally we tried Dr. King's New Discovery and are pleased to say that one bottle effected a complete cure, and our child is again strong and healthy. For coughs, colds, hoarseness, lagrippe, asthma, croup and sore lungs, its the most infallible remedy that's made. Price 50c and $1.00. Trial bottle free. Guaranteed by all Druggists.

ONE THAT IS DIFFERENT

How there came an awful blight upon the singer's ambition and how it was lifted, is the story and it is related in a way that grips the heart. It has been well said that it is a great play for those who love music, but it is a play for anyone who has a grain of sentiment in his or her makeup, and all of us have that. There is depth, feeling, pathos, power and appeal in "The Climax."

CLAPP MAY AID SHERMAN

Minnesotan Urged by Progressives to Succeed Frye in Chair.

Washington, May 6.—The progressives have decided to make it a three cornered fight for president pro tem. of the senate, the office just vacated by Senator Frye. They probably will put forward one of their own number, Moses E. Clapp of Minnesota, for the office.

Senator Gallinger is the general choice of the regular Republicans, but he is not satisfactory to the insurgents, who declare they have ten votes, enough to prevent Gallinger's election.

STATE CLOSES IN DEITZ MURDER CASE

Charge Against Leslie and His Mother May Be Dropped.

Hayward, Wis., May 9.—The prosecution rested its case against John F. Deitz, Mrs. Deitz and Leslie, charged with the killing of Oscar Harp, Oct. 8 last. Fifty-seven witnesses had been examined in six days.

Mrs. Deitz and Leslie may be released from the accusation of murder in the first degree. It is understood that with the state's case closed, except for rebuttal, a motion will be made for the dismissal of charges against Mrs. Deitz and Leslie.

It is a fact that not a shred of evidence has been introduced by the prosecution through the trial to implicate either the wife or the son.

Angus Campbell, one of the deputies, told the jury he saw shots fired by two persons, one of whom seemed to be a woman in a blue calico dress. The state made no feature of this reference.

Radically different expressions of opinion regarding the case as far as it has gone were given by the prosecution and defense after adjournment.

"A mountain of evidence" was the expression used by District Attorney Williams in describing the state's case. "Doctored evidenc ; pretty slick work," said Deitz.

SAYS PACT WILL HELP FARMERS

President Discusses Agreement With Rural Callers.

PROSPERITY ABOVE POLITICS

Twenty-five Members of the National Grange Visit White House to Protest Against Trade Arrangement With Canada—President Taft Reiterates His Belief Farmers Will Greatly Benefit by the Agreement.

Washington, May 9.—Placing prosperity above politics' President Taft told farmers who called on him to object to the passage of the Canadian reciprocity treaty that it wouldn't hurt them a little bit—and even if it should it could be repealed by any congress as soon as the harmful effects were shown. To twenty-five members of the national grange the president said he wasn't playing for votes and if the passage would alienate Republican farmers of Minnesota and other border states he really couldn't help it—he was convinced the treaty would be a good thing for the country and he was going to stand by his guns.

N. P. Hull, spokesman for the farmers, argued that reciprocity means less money for wheat and other products—"a halt in the improvement of our homes and the education of our children."

"In the past the farmers of the border states have been the backbone of protection," he said. "You could count on these people every time. No past president commanded the confidence of the farm people more than you, and I ask you if you do not think we will suffer if we are put on a free trade basis."

"I have no disposition," said the president, "to interfere with the prosperity of those who make up the bone and sinew of the nation—the farmers—and I am convinced that in no way am I interfering with it. I believe that after reciprocity has been given one year's trial no side will think of interfering with it.

"I believe this treaty to be the best thing for the country—farmers, merchants, laboring men and all—because I believe it is contrary to nature, it is flying in the face of Providence, to put an artificial tariff wall between this country and Canada. If we take down that wall we will sell more products to Canada than she will sell to us. When you, gentlemen, come to see the result I believe you will admit that you have been wrong in your fears and that I have been right."

GENERAL ELECTION LIKELY

Laurier May Appeal to Country on Reciprocity.

Ottawa, Ont., May 9.—There will be a general election in Canada before Christmas if the opposition clings to its avowed intention of obstructing reciprocity after the parliamentary adjournment is ended, according to a high government official.

The great stumbling blocks in the way of an election now are the enforced absence of Sir Wilfrid Laurier at the coronation and the fact that the Canadian West will be underrepresented in parliament until there has been a redistribution of electoral divisions, which cannot be made until the census has been completed. These figures will be available in October. If the opposition then is still obstructing reciprocity it is said a redistribution bill will be given precedence over reciprocity and an election will follow.

Dr. Arrenhenius of Stockholm Declares Life Will Disappear.

Moline, Ill., May 9.—That the earth will become uninhabitable like the planet Mars was the prophecy made by Dr. Svante Arrenhenius of Stockholm in a lecture at Augustana college.

Dr. Arrenhenius, who won the Nobel prize in chemistry in 1903 because of his electroytic disassociation theory, is regarded as the world's greatest cosmongonist. He declared that two causes are operating to bring about the extinction of life on the earth—loss in heat generated by the sun and diminution of carbonic acid gas in the atmosphere.

Dr. Arrenhenius estimates that carbonic acid gas will, in 10,000 years, cease to exist in the atmosphere in sufficient quantity to sustain vegetable life.

The Cavanagh FOREST RANGER

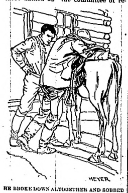
By HAMLIN GARLAND

His mind, shattered by the weight of his ghastly secret, was in confusion, and, perceiving this, Cavanagh began to question him gently. One by one he procured the names of those who voted to "deal with" the herders. One by one he obtained also the list of those named on "the committee of reprisal," and as the broken man delivered himself of these accusing facts he grew calmer. "I didn't know—I couldn't believe—that the men on that committee could chop and burn"— His utterance failed him again, and he fell silent abruptly.



HE BROKE DOWN ALTOGETHER AND SOBBED BITTERLY.

"They must have been drunk—mad drunk," retorted Cavanagh. "And yet who would believe that even drink could inflame white men to such devil's work? When did you first know what had been done?"

"That night after it was done one of the men, my neighbor, who was drawn on the committee, came to my house and asked me to give him a bed. He was afraid to go home. 'I can't face my wife and children,' he said. He told me what he'd seen, and then when I remembered that it had all been decided in my stable and the committee appointed there I began to tremble. You believe I'm telling the truth, don't you?" he again asked, with piteous accent.

"Yes, I believe you. You must tell this story to the judge. It will end the reign of the cattlemen."

"Oh, no; I can't do that."

"You must do that. It is your duty as a Christian man and citizen."

"No, no; I'll stay and help you—I'll do anything but that. I'm afraid to tell what I know. They would burn me alive. I'm not a western man. I've never been in a criminal court. I don't belong to this wild country. I came out here because my daughter is not strong, and now"— He broke down altogether and, leaning against his horse's side, sobbed pitifully.

Cavanagh, convinced that the old man's mind was too deeply affected to enable him to find his way back over the rough trail that night, spoke to him gently. "I'll get you something to eat," he said. "Sit down here and rest and compose yourself."

Wetherford turned a wild eye on the ranger as he re-entered. "Who's out there?" he asked. "Is it the marshal?"

"No; it's only one of the ranchers from below. He's tired and hungry, and I'm going to feed him." Ross replied, filled with a vivid sense of the diverse characters of the two men he was serving.

Dunn received the food with an eager hand, and after he had finished his refreshment Cavanagh remarked: "The whole country should be obliged to you for your visit to me. I shall send your information to Supervisor Redfiel'

"Don't use my name," he begged. "They will kill me if they find out that I have told. We were all sworn to secrecy, and if I had not seen that fire, that pile of bodies"—

"I know; I know! It horrified me. It made me doubt humanity," responded Cavanagh. "We of the north cry out against the south for its lynchings, but here under our eyes goes on an equally horrible display of rage over the mere question of temporary advantage, over the appropriation of free grass, which is a federal resource—something which belongs neither to one claimant nor to the other, but to the people, and should be of value to the people. You must bring these men to punishment."

Dunn could only shiver in his horror and repeat his fear. "They'll kill me if I do."

Cavanagh at last said: "You must not attempt to ride back tonight. I can't give you lodging in the cabin because my patient is sick of smallpox, but you can camp in the barn till morning, then ride straight back to my friend Redfield and tell him what you've told me. He will see that you are protected. Make your deposition and leave the country if you are afraid to remain."

In the end the rancher promised to do this, but his tone was that of a broken and distraught dotard. All the landmarks of his life seemed suddenly shifted.

Meanwhile the sufferings of Wetherford were increasing, and Cavanagh was forced to give up all hope of getting him down the trail next morning, and when Swenson, the forest guard from the South Fork, knocked at the door to say that he had been to the valley and that the doctor was coming up with Redfield and the district forester Ross thanked him, but ordered him to go into camp across the river and to warn everybody to keep clear of the cabin. "Put your packages down outside the door," he added, "and take charge of the situation on the outside. I'll take care of the business inside."

Wetherford was in great pain, but the poison of the disease had misted his brain, and he no longer worried over the possible disclosure of his identity. At times he lost the sense of his surroundings and talked of his prison life or of the long ride northward. Once he rose in his bed to beat off the wolves which he said were attacking his pony.

He was a piteous figure as he struggled thus, and it needed neither his relationship to Lee nor his bravery in caring for the Basque herder to fill the ranger's heart with a desire to relieve his suffering. "Perhaps I should have sent for Lize at once," he mused as the light brought out the red signatures of the plague.

Once the old man looked up with wide, dark, unseeing eyes and murmured, "I don't seem to know you."

"I'm a friend. My name is Cavanagh."

"I can't place you," he sadly admitted. "I feel pretty bad. If I ever get out of this place I'm going back to the Fork. I'll get a gold mine; then I'll go back and make up for what Lize has gone through. I'm afraid to go back now."

"All right," Ross soothingly agreed. "But you'll have to keep quiet till you get over this fever you're suffering from."

"If Lize weren't so far away she'd come and nurse me. I'm pretty sick."

Swenson came back to say that probably Redfield and the doctor would reach the station by noon, and thereafter, for the reason that Cavanagh expected their coming, the hours dragged woefully. It was after 1 o'clock before Swenson announced that two teams were coming with three men and two women in them. "They'll be here in half an hour."

The ranger's heart leaped. Two women! Could one of them be Lee Virginia? What folly—what sweet, desperate folly! And the other—she could not be Lize, for Lize was too feeble to ride so far. "Stop them on the other side of the bridge," he commanded. "Don't let them cross the creek on any pretext."

As he stood in the door the flutter of a handkerchief, the waving of a hand, made his pulse glow and his eyes grow dim. It was Virginia!

Lize did not flutter a kerchief or wave a hand, but when Swenson stopped the carriage at the bridge she said: "No, you don't! I'm going across. I'm going to see Ross, and if he needs help I'm going to roll up my sleeves and take hold."

Cavanagh saw her advancing, and as she came near enough for his voice to reach her he called out: "Don't come any closer! Stop, I tell you!" His voice was stern. "You must not come a step nearer. Go back across the dead line and stay there. No one but the doctor shall enter this door. Now, that's final."

"I want to help!" she protested.

"I know you do, but I won't have it. This quarantine is real, and it goes!"

"But suppose you yourself get sick?"

"We'll cross that bridge when we get to it. I'm all right so far, and I'll call for help when I need it."

His tone was imperative, and she obeyed, grumbling about his youth and the value of his life to the service.

"That's all very nice," he replied, "but I'm in it, and I don't intend to expose you or any one else to the contagion."

"I've had it once," she asserted.

He looked at her and smiled in recognition of her subterfuge.

"No matter; you're ailing and might take it again, so toddle back. It's mighty good of you and of Lee to come, but there isn't a thing you can do, and here's the doctor," he added as he recognized the young student who passed for a physician in the Fork. He was a beardless youth of small experience and no great courage, and as he approached with hesitant feet he asked:

"Are you sure it's smallpox?"

Cavanagh smiled. "The indications are all that way. That last importation of Basques brought it probably from the steerage of the ship. I'm told they've had several cases over in the basin."

"Have you been vaccinated?"

"Yes, when I was in the army."

"Then you're all right."

"I hope so."

There was a certain comic relief in this long distance diagnosing of a "case" by a boy, and yet the tragic fact beneath it all was that Wetherford was dying, a broken and dishonored husband and father, and that his identity must be concealed from his wife and daughter, who were much more deeply concerned over the ranger than over the desperate condition of his patient. "And this must continue to be so," Cavanagh decided. And as he stood there looking toward the girl's fair figure on the bridge he came to the final, fixed determination never to speak one word or make a sign that might lead to the dying man's identification. "Of what use is it?" he asked himself. "Why should even Lize be made to suffer? Wetherford's poor misspent life is already over for her, and for Lee he is only a dim memory."

Redfield came near enough to see that the ranger's face, though tired, showed no sign of illness and was relieved. "Who is this old herder?" he asked. "Hasn't he any relatives in the country?"

"He came from Texas, so he said. You're not coming in?" he broke off to say to the young physician, whom Lize had shamed into returning to the cabin.

"I suppose I'll have to," he protested weakly.

"I don't see the need of it. The whole place reeks of the poison, and you might carry it away with you. Unless you insist on coming in and are sure you can prevent further contagion I shall oppose your entrance. You are in the company of others. I must consider their welfare."

The young fellow was relieved. "Well, so long as we know what it is I can prescribe just as well right here," he said and gave directions for the treatment, which the ranger agreed to carry out.

"I tried to bring a nurse," explained Redfield, "but I couldn't find anybody but old Lize who would come."

"I don't blame them," replied Ross. "It isn't a nice job, even when you've got all the conveniences."

His eyes as he spoke were on the figure of Lee, who still stood on the bridge, awed and worshipful, barred of approach by Lize. "She shall not know," he silently vowed. "Why put her through useless suffering and shame? Edward Wetherford's disordered life is near its end. To betray him to his wife and daughter would be but the reopening of an old wound."

He was stirred to the center of his heart by the coming of Lee Virginia, so sweet and brave and trustful. His stern mood melted as he watched her there waiting, with her face turned toward him, longing to help. "She would have come alone if necessary," he declared, with a fuller revelation of the self sacrificing depth of her love, "and she would come to my side this moment if I called her."

He went back to his repulsive service sustained and soothed by the little camp of faithful friends on the other side of the stream.

During one of his clearest moments Wetherford repeated his wish to die a stranger. "I'm going out like the old time west, a rag of what I once was. Don't let them know. Put no name over me. Just say, 'An old cowpuncher lies here.'"

Cavanagh's attempt to change his hopeless tone proved unavailing. Enfeebled by his hardships and his prison life, he had little reserve force upon which to draw in fighting such an enemy. He sank soon after this little speech into a coma which continued to hold him in its unbroken grasp as night fell.

Meantime, seeing no chance of aiding the ranger, Redfield and the forester prepared to return, but Lee, reenforced by her mother, refused to accompany them. "I shall stay here," she said, "till he is safely out of it—till I know that he is beyond all danger."

Redfield did not urge her to return as vigorously as Dalton expected him to do, but when he understood the girl's desire to be near her lover he took off his hat and bowed to her. "You are entirely in the right," he said. "Here is where you belong."

Redfield honored Lize for her sympathetic support of her daughter's resolution and expressed his belief that Ross would escape the plague. "I feel that his splendid vigor, combined with the mountain air, will carry him through, even if he should prove not to be immune. I shall run up again day after tomorrow. I shall be very anxious. What a nuisance that the telephone line is not extended to this point. Ross has been insisting on its value for months."

Lee saw the doctor go with some dismay. Young as he was, he was at least a reed to cling to in case the grisly terror seized upon the ranger. "Mr. Redfield, can't you send a real doctor? It seems so horrible to be left here without instructions."

The forester, before going, again besought Cavanagh not to abandon his work in the forestry service and intimated that at the proper time advancement would be offered him. "The whole policy is but beginning," said he, "and a practical ranger with experience and education will prove of greatest value."

To this Ross made reply: "At the moment I feel that no promise of advancement could keep me in this country of grafters, poachers and assassins. I'm weary of it and all it stands for. However, if I could aid in extending the supervision of the public ranges and in stopping forever this murder and burning that go on outside the forestry domain I might remain in the west."

"Would you accept the supervisorship of the Washakie forest?" demanded Dalton.

Taken by surprise, he stammered, "I might, but am I the man?"

"You are. Your experience fits you for a position where the fight is hot. The Washakie forest is even more a bone of contention than this. We have laid out the lines of division between the sheep and the cows, and it will take a man to enforce our regulations. You will have the support of the best citizens. They will all rally, with you as leader, and so end the warfare there."

"It can never end till Uncle Sam puts rangers over every section of public lands and lays out the grazing lines as we have done in this forest," retorted Cavanagh.

"I know, but to get that requires a revolution in the whole order of things." Then his fine young face lighted up. "But we'll get it. Public sentiment is coming our way. The old order is already so eaten away that only its shell remains."

"It may be. If these assassins are punished I shall feel hopeful of the change."

"I shall recommend you for the supervisorship of the Washakie forest," concluded Dalton decisively. "And so goodby and good luck."

England, his blood relatives, even the Redfields, seemed very remote to the ranger as he stood in his door that night and watched the sparkle of Swenson's campfire through the trees. With the realization that there waited a brave girl of the type that loves single heartedly, ready to sacrifice everything to the welfare of her idealized subject, he felt unworthy, selfish, vain.

"If I should fall sick she would insist on nursing me. For her sake I must give Swenson the most rigid orders not to allow her, no matter what happens, to approach. I will not have her touched by this thing."

Beside the blaze Lee and her mother sat for the most part in silence, with nothing to do but to wait the issue of the struggle going on in the cabin, so near and yet so inaccessible to their will. It was as if a magic wall, crystal clear, yet impenetrable, shut them away from the man whose quiet heroism was the subject of their constant thought.

It was marvelous, as the dusk fell and the air nipped keen, to see how Lize Wetherford renewed her youth. The excitement seemed to have given her a fresh hold on life. She was wearied, but by no means weakened, by her ride and ate heartily of the rude fare which Swenson set before her. "This is what I needed," she exultantly said—"the open air and these trout. I feel ten years younger already. Many's the night I've camped on the range with your father with nothing but a purp tent to cover us both and the wolves howling round us. I'd feel pretty fairly gay if it wasn't for Ross over there in that cabin playing nurse and cook all by his lonesomeness."

Lee expressed a deep satisfaction from the fact of their nearness. "If he is ill we can help him," she reiterated.

There was a touch of frost in the air as they went to their beds, and, though she shivered, Lize was undismayed. "There's nothing the matter with my heart," she exulted. "I don't believe there was anything really serious the matter with me, anyway. I reckon I was just naturally grouchy and worried over you and Ross."

CHAPTER XX.

WITH THE AID OF THE PRESS.

LEE VIRGINIA was now living a romance stranger and more startling than any she had ever read. In imagination she was able to look back and down upon the Fork as if she had been carried into another world—a world that was at once primeval, yet peaceful; a world of dreaming trees, singing streams and silent peaks; a realm in which law and order reigned, maintained by one determined young man whose power was derived from the president himself. She felt safe—entirely safe—for just across the roaring mountain torrent the two intrepid guardians of the forest were encamped. One of them, it is true, came of Swedish parentage, and the other was a native of England, but they were both American in the high sense of being loyal to the federal will, and she trusted them more unquestioningly than any other men in all that west save only Redfield. She had no doubt there were others equally loyal, equally to be trusted, but she did not know them.

She rose to a complete understanding of Cavanagh's love for "the high country" and his enthusiasm for the cause, a cause which was able to bring together the student from Yale and the graduates of Bergen and of Oxford and make them comrades in preserving the trees and streams of the mountain states against the encroachments of some of their own citizens, who were openly, shortsightedly and cynically bent upon destruction, spoliation and misuse.

She had listened to the talk of the forester and the supervisor, and she had learned from them that Cavanagh was sure of swift advancement now that he had shown his courage and his skill, and the thought that he might leave the state to take charge of another forest brought her some uneasiness, for she and Lize had planned to go to Sulphur City. She had consented to this because it still left to her the possibility of occasionally seeing or hearing from Cavanagh. But the thought that he might go away altogether took some of the music out of the sound of the stream and made the future vaguely sad.

For the next two days Cavanagh slept but little, for his patient grew steadily worse [illegible] fever mounted. Wetherford pleaded for air. The ranger threw open the doors, admitting freely the cool, sweet mountain wind. "He might as well die of a draft as smother," was his thought, and by the use of cold cloths he tried to allay the itching and the pain.

With the coming of the third night Wetherford was unconscious and unrecognizable to any one who had known him in the days of "the free range." He was going as the wild west was going, discredited, ulcerated, poisoned, incapable of rebirth, yet carrying something fine to his grave. He had acted the part of a brave man; that shall be said of him. He had gone to the rescue of the poor Basque instinctively, with the same reckless disregard of consequences to himself which marked his character when as a cow boss on the range he had set aside the most difficult tasks for his own rope or gun. His regard for the ranger into whose care he was now about to commit his wife and daughter persisted in spite of his suffering. In him was his hope, his stay. Once again, in a lucid moment, he reverted to the promise which he had drawn from Cavanagh.

"If I go you must take care—of my girl—take care of Lize too. Promise me that. Do you promise?" he insisted.

"I promise—on honor," Ross repeated, and, with a faint pressure of his hand (so slender and weak), Wetherford sank away into the drowse which deepened hour by hour, broken now and then by convulsions, which wrung the stern heart of the ranger till his hands trembled for pity.

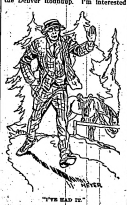
The day was well advanced when the sound of rattling pebbles on the hill back of his cabin drew his attention, and a few moments later a man on a weary horse rode up to his door and dropped heavily from the saddle. He was a small, dark individual, with spectacles, plainly of the city.

"Beware! Smallpox!" called Ross as his visitor drew near the door.

The newcomer waived his hand contemptuously. "I've had it. Are you Ross Cavanagh?"

"I am."

"My name is Hartley. I represent the Denver Roundup. I'm interested in this sheep herder killing—merely as a reporter," he added, with a fleeting smile. "Did you know old man Dunn of Deer Creek had committed suicide?"



"I'VE HAD IT."

Cavanagh started and his face set. "No!"

"They found him shot through the neck and dying—this morning. As he was gasping his last breath he said, 'The ranger knows,' and when they asked, 'What ranger?' he said, 'Cavanagh.' When I heard that I jumped a horse and beat 'em all over here. Is this true? Did he tell you who the murderers are?"

Cavanagh did not answer at once. He was like a man caught on a swaying bridge, and his first instinct was to catch the swing, to get his balance. "Wait a minute. What is it all to you?"

Again that peculiar grin lighted the small man's dark, unwholesome face. "It's a fine detective stunt, and, besides, it means $20 per column and mebbe a 'boost.' I can't wait; you can't wait. It's up to us to strike now. If these men knew you have their names they'd hike for Texas or the high seas. Come now! Everybody tells me you're one of these idealistic highbrow rangers who care more for the future of the west than most natural born westerners. What's your plan? If you'll yoke up with me we'll run these devils into the earth and win great fame and you'll be doing the whole country a service."

The ranger studied the small figure before him with penetrating gaze. There was deliberate fearlessness in the stranger's face and eyes, and, notwithstanding his calm, almost languid movement, restless energy could be detected in his voice.

"What is your plan?" the ranger asked.

"Get ourselves deputized by the court and jump these men before they realize that there's anything doing. They count the whole country on their side, but they're mistaken. They've outdone themselves this time, and a tremendous reaction has set in. Everybody knows you've held an even hand over these warring Picts and Scots, and the court will be glad to deputize you to bring them to justice. The old sheriff is paralyzed. Everybody knows that the assassins are prominent cattle ranchers, and yet no one dares move. It's up to you fellows who represent law and order to act quick."

Cavanagh followed him with complete comprehension and a desire to carry out the plan seized upon him.

"I'd do it if I could," he said, "but it happens I am nursing a sick man. I am perhaps already exposed to the same disease. I can't leave here for a week or more. It would not be right for me to expose others"—

"Don't worry about that. Take a hot bath, fumigate your clothing, shave your head. I'll fix you up, and I'll get some one to take your place." Catching sight of Swenson and Lize on the bridge, he asked: "Who are those people? Can't they take your nursing job?"

"No," answered Cavanagh bluntly. "It's no use. I can't join you in this at least not now."

"But you'll give me the names which Dunn gave you?"

DOGS AND CHILDREN

(Special to the Record-Herald.)

Los Angeles, April 27.—Rushing from San Diego to New York on a special car, Mr. and Mrs. Van Beason of the latter place calmly gave as their reason that they are making the hurry-up trip because their Cantonese dog has a sore eye, which they fear will cause blindness.

Its owners would have none of the coast oculists, but needs must hasten on a special car from coast to coast to receive the advantages of expert service in New York.

Twenty-three per cent of the children of the poor in New York suffer from inflamed and defective eyes, caused by insufficient food and insanitary homes. Millions of children in the world NEVER HAVE ENOUGH TO EAT.

A system that makes it possible for a few to live in lavish, wanton luxury; to spend thousands to save the eyes of a dog while the children of the poor go blind for the want of proper food and conditions must go. It is inhuman. It must go.—Ex.

APOSTLE OF PEOPLE

Democrats must reckon nationally with Woodrow Wilson, governor of New Jersey, who has, in a few short months, wrested his state from the blighting grip of corrupt political parties; blocked his party sending an avowed corruptionist to the United States Senate, regulated public service corporations, given the workingmen an automotic compensation act, and forced through hostile senate and house many other measures demanded directly by the people. To-day he stands the foremost apostle in the country of popular government, government of, for and by the peole. The shrewdest men in his party say he is the man best fitted to lead the Democratic party out into glorious activity without plunging the country into political chaos. Wilson is a radical, but a radical with depth, mature political judgment, a keen knowledge of the needs of the people, a respect for the industrial activities of the country, and a determination to give into the hands of the people the rule filched from them by machine politicians working in the interest of "superior" persons. Gov. Wilson is a decidely new force in the political life of the country. He deals in acts, not platitudes. In every state in the Union his name is mentioned as a possible Presidential candidate. At present he is making a tour of the West, where he will speak in many states.—Grit.

CONSERVATION SUSTAINED

A decision handed down by the Supreme court sustains the Roosevelt conservation policies. This decision upholds the constitutionality of the establishment of vast reserves for public purposes, and the authority of the Federal government over that of state governments in the regulation and supervisionof such reservations. The decision goes further. It holds that the Federal government, without the consent of the state government affected, may set aside vast areas of public lands as public reserves, thereby reaffirming the principle that the nation is greater than a state, the welfare of all the people of more importance than that of part of them. The decision is a victory for Roosevelt policies all along the line.

The United States now may not only protect those lands reserved for public purposes together with their resources and water powers, but may continue to extend such domains wherever and whenever public interest mal demand. It can continue the work begun by ex-Chief Forester Pinchot in rehabilitating forest lands especially those that are capable by irrigation of being made productive. Indeed, the United States can now, without trails of conservation which have heretofore been regarded as inexpediant, because its right and authority can no longer be disputed either by great corporations, in the work that it may undertake.

The decision has come after a most vigorous battle in the courts during which every phase of laws relating to conservation has been scrutinized and its constitutionality tested. The decision is the final seal of approval of service rendered the American people by Theodore Roosevelt—service the value and importance of which will not b fully appreciated for years to come.—Grit.

THE OHIO GRAFT CHARGES

The every day citizen, who pays his debts and would rather sleep nights than sponge a dollar out of others that does not belong to him, reads with a sickening disgust the story of alleged graft in the Ohio Legislature.

Taken in connection with the Lorimer election, the Adams county, O., scandals, the Pittsburg graft cases, etc., one soon acquires the cynical feeling that American politics is a putrid garbage heap.

Meanwhile, the average business firm soon finds out that it must give dollar for dollar, or there will be a gravestone over its remains in a capacious industrial cemetery.

The grafters, when you look at them, seem just about like average people. You find their names on the philanthropic subscription papers their bankers certify to their financial orthodoxy, they often sit in high priced pews at church.

Why is it that the American people beat the world on making steel and cotton and bridges and locomotives, but are turning out such a job lot article in the way of government?

A big problem for a little article. Here are three reasons:

1.—Too much politics in local government. We used to feel that unless a man agreed with us about the tariff, he was not capable of building streets and sewers. But the voters are fast getting by that period of their political infancy.

2.—The practise of secret pledging of convention delegates. The voter walks up to the caucus ballot box with a chesty feeling of patriotic citizenship, and votes for some delegate who purposes and is pledged to act directly contrary to the desire of the men who voted for him. The voters are tired of having it possible for office seekers to get into power, merely by "seeing" some boss.

3.—The sluggish, sleepy, phlegmatic indifference of many supposedly good citizens. They will remain away from the caucus to save a dollar's worth of time, while the rats of municipal knavery are wasting $10 in taxes, direct and indirect.

NEW YORK CITY

The population of New York City is now larger than that of sixteen different states and territories. Within a radius of twenty miles are living 10,000,000 people. Within fifty miles are 2,364 towns and cities, with a population, including that of New York itself, of one-fifth the population of the entire United States. The increase of the city's population last year was about 400,000. It entertains every day an average of 150,000 transient visitors, the number sometimes mounting to 300,000. Here are found more Irish than in Dublin, more Italians than in Rome and Venice, and more Germans than in any city save Berlin. One city block contains 63,000 people. One square mile has an average of 447 persons to the acre. It is estimated that in 1950 the city will number 25,000,000 people. The city has 50,000 persons on its pay-roll, including 7,178 police men, 3,000 firemen and 2,000 street sweepers. It has among its residents 2,000 millionaries, as against 28 in 1885. It schools number 16 high and 496 elementary, with 700,000 pupils and 11,000 teachers.—Missionary Review.

LETTER FROM WASHINGTON.

Direct Election of U. S. Senators and Admission of Arizona Seem Assured.

Washington, D. C., May 11, 1911. The Democrats are having trouble with their legislative program. For one thing it is feared that they cut out too big a chunk to be successfully handled at a special session of Congress. There was party harmony among the House Democrats in the caucuses which shaped the program and among the leaders. The reciprocity bill had practically the united support of the Democrats. There wasn't much of a hitch when it came to passing the campaign publicity bill, although the Republicans did cause their adversaries a little embaressment over that measure. Of course, it was to be expected that the resolution for the direct election of senators would go through with a whoop and it did. There were no party lines drawn there. The Democrats favored the reapportionment bill because it gives them some increase in representation. The farmers' free list bill the Democrats are supporting almost to a man, with an occasional exception. However, no one expects that this bill will ever be enacted into law, at least so far as this session is concerned. It was made a part of the legislative program because of its alleged soothing syrup qualities, which the Democrats thought were needed among the north western farmers to atone for the short-comings of the Canadian reciprocity bill. But having gone this far, it looks as if the party in control of the House had arrived at a rock upon which the Democrats may hopelessly shatter their program. The sugar schedule is another delicate proposition which may cause trouble. Then there is cotton, which the South is vitally interested in. The three schedules, woolen, cotton and sugar are bound to present serious difficulties and may in the end break up the solid Democratic front.

W. W. Rich of St. Paul has been in Washington. He was custodian of the federal building in St. Paul until recently when it was discovered that the salary connected with the office had been discontinued. He has been in Washington trying to get the matter adjusted and the salary restored. Mr. Rich claims that former representative Tawney is responsible for his being dropped from the salary roll. The item was eliminated from the appropriation bill, which Mr. Tawney had charge of. He explains that during the campaign last fall he spoke with Mr. Anderson, then running for Congress at Houston, Dodge Center and St. Charles, in support of the Republican legislative ticket. Mr. Rich is an appointee of Senator Clapp, who was quite active in support of Anderson before the general election. It is pointed out that the activity of Clapp and Rich in the first district may have furnished the motive for Tawney's dropping the St. Paul man from Uncle Sam's salary roll.

The progressive Republicans of the Senate are quite confident that at this session of Congress. These are the propositions providing for the direct election of United States Senators, which failed by a narrow margin at the last session, and the admission of Arizona. The Senate progressive Republicans are also back of the tariff commission measure, but there is not much hope of passing it at this time. Most of the opposition to the admission of Arizona has been on account of the popular government features, especially of its constitution, especially that part relating to the recall of all elective officers including judges. But it is pointed out that this opposition is now subsiding and has been greatly weakened by the effect of the declaration of Colonel Roosevelt in his recent address at Los Angeles endorsing the recall amendment submitted by the California legislature.

In speaking of the effect of Canadian reciprocity, should the measure now pending pass both House and Senate and be ratified by Canada and the United States, Congressman Anderson recently said: "In my opinion the twin cities and New England States will be the first to regret reciprocity and to clamor for its repeal. This opinion is shared by Davis and others of the Minnesota delegation who are opposed to the proposed trade agreement. Hearings are now in progress before the Senate Committee. Farmers and others will be given an opportunity to present their cause. A vote in the Senate will not be reached for several weeks. Senators will want to explain their position to the country and their constituents. There are 92 Senaors, almost all of whom will have something to say on reciprocity. It takes time to talk and the Senate is noted for its long winded talkers. It is becoming evident that opposition against reciprocity is growing stronger in the upper chamber. There is much talk when it comes to a vote it will not have sufficient strength to carry. Certain it is that opposition is daily getting stronger and when the full effect of the presentation of the farmers' cause is felt among Senators reciprocity will have fewer friends than it has now.

• • •

The progressive Republicans of the Senate did not get all they wanted or all they were entitled to under the agreement with the Senate regular leaders, in the committee assignments. But notwithstanding this they secured some important chairmanships and other assignments. As indicated in previous correspondence Senator Clapp landed the chairmanship of the committee on interstate commerce, a position which gives him great opportunity to give direction to legislation affecting railroads and transportation. Cummins of Iowa is also on this committee. LaFollette wanted to get on, but the regulars blocked this move, fearing that the progressives would be too strong numerically with the addition of the Wisconsin man. The committees the progressive Republicans were most interested in were Interstate Commerce, Judiciary and Finance and Borah and Cummins got on Judiciary while La Follette landed Finance. This committee in its present make-up is rock-ribbed stand-pat from stem to stem, with but few exceptions. Penrose is the chairman. He succeeds Aldrich and is always found on the side of the "interests." Other standpat members of this committee, which is the watch-dog of the manufacturing interests when it comes to the delicate matter of tariff revision are Cullom, Lodge, McCumber, Smoot Gallinger, Clark of Wyoming, Heyburn, and Bailey.

Mrs. J. M. Bishop left for Minneapolis Monday evening where she will attend Grand Chapter as a delegate from the local chapter of the Eastern Star Lodge.

Speaking of contest work here is another oportunity especially for boys and girls in our rural schools: We want to see how well you can do as farmers in raising corn. This has been a great contest among schools in other counties. Yes, even in Pennington county. Why should we not be able to produce corn as good in quality and quantity as our next neighbors? Or to make the baby county in our state hold its own in the production of corn and vegetables?

Our boys and girls will give the answer next fall by the best display of production; for we are going to offer prizes in this contest. The boys and girls on some of our well tilled farms did splendidly last year, and let us make an effort to do even better this year.

Northern Minnesota has enough of tain for the purpose. Boys and the seed, the best corn we can obses right now and we sthall send you surprised to see what elegant sorn you can raise. Be sure to carry home next fall as an appreciation of your ses right now and we shall send you said day to satisfy said judgment. test.

As for this county, we will distribute to the boys and girls who will promise to plant and care for a patch we will send them some seed corn free of charge for planting. Ask your parents for a good patch—a patch that will show the best qualities of that farm and plant the corn sent you, care for it. You will be surpprised to see what elegant corn you can riase. Be sure to carry home that best prize. It will be yours next fall as an appriciation of your best efforts.

Let us have the names and addres- [illegible] fresh air and—moisture; conditions are the best for raising these products. Send to Extension Division, University Farm, St. Paul, Minn., for Extension Bulletin No. 3 and you will get full information about the County Industrial Contest. [illegible] girls in a family can club together to cultivate and care for the garden farm. Send for the seed at once as the season is getting later.

Let us have the satisfaction of giving you, boys and girls, many prizes next fall; and than possibly, some of you, as a result, will have a chance to go to the University Farm, Minneapolis for a weeks study and observation at the Agricultural School, expenses paid and all free—that is if you win the best prizes. I can not promise this for sure, but we will see what can be done in this regard. All depends on winning prizes now, so be sure at once to send your request for seed corn.

The Teachers Examinations, held May 4, 5, and 6 was well attended; some fifty-eight teachers registering. It speaks well for the cause of education to see so many applicants willing to enter one of the noblest and highest professions in life. Only good in the largest degree can come to our school through an efficient corps of teachers and we hope for the best results.

Notice came too late for an announcement at our Teacher's Examination of the Summer School. Supt. H. F. Anderson announces that the Summer Training School will be held in the city of Red Lake Falls. It begins June 19th and continues six weeks closing with the usual examinations.

A strong corps of teachers is secured, and the special feature of this school will be that double work will be given in first grade subjects. A weeks special work in sewing will be given to acquaint teachers with the work of the Industrial School Contest above mentioned. Teachers wanting information as to the work of summer school at the University and Agricultural School at St. Anthony Park shold address Mr. Geo. F. Howard, Extension Division, University Farm, St. Paul for bulletins and outline of work.

ADVANTAGES OF OUR FARM LOANS

A very desirable feature of our farm loans lies in the fact that you need not wait for all the papers to be sent back East for approval before knowing if the loan is really to be made.

When we pass on a loan it is final. The money is ready when all papers are completed.

Another important advantage of borrowing through us is that the principal and all interest payments are payable here. No expense in remitting to outside investors. All your dealings are with us.

When crops are short or times a little "off color" we make it a point to look after the interests of our farm loan customers first. It is no small advantage to have a considerate banking connection at such times.

Come in, when you are ready for your loan.

and calmly threw up the sponge leaving a free field for Kline.

Out the back door and to the northwest went Bruin brushing by two of the city schoolmaams who have ever since been explaining how they were not frightened, no not a bit and if they had only known that he had been wanted they would have made good his capture then and there.

However that was left for less fair hands to accomplish and on Friday evening the report went around town that he had been captured near Strip where a bare paper had attracted his attention.

A reward of $240 had been deposited in the First National Bank for the return of Mr. Bear which amount was cheerly paid for his return by his owner who had shed many a tear over Bruin's waywardness and rejoiced not a little at his capture.

REINER

To-day we are getting a good rain, and we certainly need it bad.

Mr. Martin Johnson of Highlanding township was at Soren Hermanson's a couple of days last week and seeded some wheat, as Soren was unable to do seeding himself.

Mikkel Anderson did some seeding for P. Nybakken last week.

Emil Sigerud and John Anderson finished plowing and seeding for Mr. A. L. Kjos last week.

Mr. A. J. Olsen, our new farmer, is going some. And when he gets his breath. Now over Sunday he will go some more.

A. L. Kjos and John Anderson went to town last Friday on business.

Miss Mathilda Furr our teacher received sad news last Saturday, that her father was dead. Miss Fur left the same day for Thief River Falls and from there to her home at Holt.

Henry Tollefson, Hilda and Bertha Jorgenson Sundayed at A. J. Osen's home in town of Star.

The Berg family has again been on the sick list, but are a little better at present.

One of our bachelors is wearing a smile on his face, now-a-days. But we aren't surprised at all.

Martin Anderson has been kept busy lately with blacksmithing, and other odd jobs.

Tuberculosis Movement Increases

From statistics published today in the new Tuberculosis Directory of the National Association for the Sturdy and Prevention of Tuberculosis, it is ascertained that over 600 cities and towns of the United States, besides about 100 in Canada, are engaged in the war against consumption and that on April 1st there were nearly 1500 different agencies at work in the crusade, an increase of nearly 700 per cent in the last seven years.

The new Directory lists 421 tuberculosis sanatoria, hospitals, and day camps; 511 associations and committees for the prevention of tuberculosis; 342 special dispensaries; 68 open air schools; 98 hospitals for the insane and penal institutions making special provision for their tuberculosis immates; besides giving an account of the anti-tuberculosis legislation in every state and in about 250 cities. The Directoy, which is the third of its kind that has ever been published in this country, gives the most complete survey of the anti-tuberculosis movement that can be secured, and shows the remarkable growth of this campaign in the last seven years. The first Directory in 1904 showed only 183 orgaizations in the entire United States. The second Directory in 1908 reported 649 different agencies as compared with 1440 in the new book. Taking these figures as a basis, the anti-tuberculosis movement has increased in fact since 1904, nearly 700 per cent, and since 1908, over 105 per cent.

The new Directory is sold by the National Association for the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis, 105 East 22nd Street, New York City, at cost price, 50 cents postpaid.

The State Tuberculosis Association announces that the only one of the 7 tuberculosis bills before the late legislature that passed was H. F. 887 (Chapter 116) authorizing counties to hire visiting nurses for consumptives. Not a cent was voted for additional hospital accomodation for Minnesota's 10,000 consumptives.

Even Tempered.

"Is your husband even tempered?"

"Yes," answered Mrs. Wuryd, "he's even tempered enough. He's just about as irritable one day as another."

AN AERIAL ENTHUSIAST

By LUCY K. WYNKOOP

Having been left a fortune very much larger than I had any use for—I was a young girl then or I would have known that no fortune is quite large enough—I determined to endow some institution. A member of the board of directors of an insane asylum, a lady, persuaded me to give her pet project $100,000.

I drove one afternoon to the asylum with a check for the amount I was to give. The lady I have mentioned went with me and had arranged for her attorney to be there with the necessary legal papers.

When we arrived we found a telegram from the attorney saying that he would be delayed. Learning that the patients were to have a dance the same evening, we decided to remain and have a look at the dancers. No patients were received in the institution except those who were considered homeless. Indeed, most of them were unbalanced on but one subject. We were given tea in the apartments of the medical director, and his wife made us at home till the ball opened, which was very early in the evening, for it must end at 10 o'clock.

I and my gift were known, and nothing would do but that I should take part in the festivities. I danced several times, when a young man of very prepossessing appearance came up to me and asked if I would be his partner. There are occasions when a girl will meet a man to whom she is especially drawn. I had not been in company with this young fellow long before I felt a pang that he should be insane. He charmed me at once.

Naturally I wished to discover his weak point. I tried him on several subjects, but saw nothing abnormal until I struck aviation. Then he began to talk wild. He said that he had some views about flying machines he hoped to work out which would bring aeroplanes nearer to the construction of birds. A bird's wings were not rigid. Why should those of an aeroplane be rigid? He had in mind a plan by which the wings of the machine should flap like those of the bird.

"True," he said, "birds often soar without using their pinions, but since they flap them at all it indicates that flapping is necessary."

"Why do you wish to go up in the air?" I asked. "I am quite content on the earth."

"I only know that I would love to sail up in the clouds, to pass over the tops of high mountains. I would love"—

I shut him off. I was quite satisfied with having discovered his weakness. I had no mind to get him to raving. I excused myself and joined some one else. But later, shortly before the close of the entertainment, he joined me again and asked for a last dance.

I declined. His personality had thrown a spell over me which I thought if yielded to would grow upon me. In other words, I felt that I had met my fate in one of unsound mind and it would be dangerous to my comfort to yield to what might soon become a serious infatuation. He gave me a half reproachful glance—a glance suggesting to me that he had been impressed by me as I had been impressed by him—and left me.

When the evening's amusement was ended my friend the directress told me that we would proceed to the superintendent's room, where the attorney was waiting for us to transact our business and then go home. I went with her, and, on opening the door of the office, there, sitting at a table looking over some papers, was the young man who had gone daft on aviation.

I stopped short, paralyzed with astonishment. He arose and gave me one of those pleasant smiles that had helped to charm me.

"Why," I said, "I—I didn't expect to find you here."

It was his turn to look surprised. "I supposed you knew who I was," he said.

"I did not. I thought"— I stopped.

He looked very much amused. "I see," he said. "You mistook me for one of the patients. I'm not sure but some of them might change places with me to my advantage." Then, turning to the work before him, he read me several legal documents, now and then stopping to explain something, I knowing not half as much of what he was talking as when he was discoursing on aviation. When he had finished he gave me a lot of papers and took my check, which I had made payable to the trustees.

The lawyer or lunatic—I was so confused that I was not yet certain in my mind which he was—rode in the same carriage with us to a railroad station, where we dropped him he taking a passing train, while we drove on to my home.

I went to bed with my mind in a good deal of a whirl, but above it all was a feeling of thankfulness that the man I had met was not a lunatic, for it was possible his mental condition might make a great deal of difference to me.

It was not long before he expressed through my friend the directress a desire to continue our acquaintance, and I sent him an invitation to call on me. At his first visit I drew him on to aviation, and I learned that he made it his hobby, having an inventive taste, but had never been up in an aeroplane in his life.

I married the supposed lunatic, and, strange to say, though I can give him all the funds he needs to prosecute his aerial tastes, he prefers his uninteresting law cases.

To resent kindly rebuke is not a sign of spirit, but of stupidity.

Eddystone Lighthouse.

The Eddystone lighthouse, fourteen miles off Plymouth, England, and exposed to the full fury of the southwestern seas, was built by Winstanley in four seasons. Begun in 1696 and finished in 1700, it was destroyed in the dreadful storm of 1703. The second structure was completed in 1709 and destroyed in 1755, after it had faced the wind and the waves for something over forty-six years. The third tower, finished in 1759 and condemned in 1878, was followed by the present wonderful structure, which since 1882 has been defying the elements while it flashed out over the terrible waters its saving light. Since the brave Winstanley built the first Eddystone lighthouse similar safeguards have sprung up like magic sentinels along all the coasts of all the oceans, and those who sail upon the great deeps of the earth are forewarned and forearmed against the dangers which threaten them.—New York American.

An Effective Prayer.

"Years ago," says a well known actor, "I appeared in an amateur performance of a play that had a distinct religious flavor. The leading player had studied for the ministry and had a deep and sonorous voice. In one of the scenes the lights were supposed to be turned down and a raging storm simulated. The accompanying lines were:

"'O Lord, deliver us from the powers of darkness.'

"The leading man spoke the lines, but darkness didn't follow. He spoke them again, and still the stage was distressingly light. Finally he roared:

"'O Lord, deliver us from the power of darkness and also give that fool gas man sense enough to turn down the lights.'

"The gas lights went down, and the audience roared."—Pittsburg Chronicle-Telegraph.

The Bible as a Detective.

The Bible was used until quite recent years for the detection of thieves. Dr. Jessopp told in 1882 how there were still persons living who had witnessed the ordeal to which an East Anglican parson subjected his servants when his cash box was missing. He ordered them all into his bedroom and ranged them around the walls. From the center of the ceiling hung the rope used to lower coffins into the churchyard graves, wound round a Bible, from the leaves of which projected the church door key. This was sent spinning round, and the one at whom the key pointed when it stopped was proclaimed as the thief. Happily the man thus marked out was able to prove an alibi. But this did not convince the servants that the test was a bad one. They only concluded that the thief was not there.—London Chronicle.

An Unbeliever.

"This here paper says as how they've just discovered the remains of a thirty-five foot saurian in Nevada."

"What in thunder's a saurian?"

"Blamed if I know. I s'pose mebbe it's somethin' like a sardine."

"Huh! You ign'rant chump, they ain't no thirty-five foot sardines."

"Well, there could be the remains of one, couldn't they?"

"Haw-haw! Who'd ever buy a box of them things?"

"Darn you, you're just like all the rest of these here smart guys that are upsettin' religion. I think they is remains of thirty-five foot sardines in Nevada. I got faith to suppose that they is also remains of men big enough to buy 'em by the box an' eat 'em on crackers. You know what you are? You are one of these here atheists!"—New York Journal.

Pyramid of the Sun.

The most colossal structure of prehistoric man in America, known as the pyramid of the sun, is at Teotihuacan, Mexico, not far from the capital. Close to the great pyramid stands the pyramid of the moon, which the builders regarded as the wife of the sun, and surrounding them are nearly 200 mounds of greater or lesser magnitude, which tradition says were crowned by temples and public buildings. Two hundred and sixty-eight steps lead to the summit of the pyramid of the sun, which is 216 feet high. It is 761 feet square at the base, and the summit is 59 by 105 feet.—National Geographic Magazine.

A Real One.

"Is this a problem play?" asked the one night stand critic of the manager.

"It is," replied that worthy.

"And what," asked the critic, "is the special problem presented?"

"How to get money enough into the box office for railroad fares to our next date," said the manager, with tainted levity.—Baltimore American.

MADERO'S FORCE ATTACKS JUAREZ

Rebel General Loses Control Over His Followers.

BULLETS FLY ACROSS LINE

Five Persons Are Killed on American Soil and at Least a Dozen Others Wounded.

El Paso, Tex., May 9.—Insubordination in the ranks of General Madero's army and lust for the fight of which federal concessions apparently had deprived them caused a fierce attack on Juarez, which culminated in a careful retreat of the insurrectos after a day of continuous skirmishing.

The 150 rebels who opened fire on the federals not only captured some of the important outposts, but carried the fighting into Juarez. Lacking reinforcements they retired.

The casualties of the insurrectos and federals are not known, but five people on the American side of the line were killed and at least twelve wounded. Thousands of people in El Paso dotted roof tops or lined the river banks in direct line of the fire. Colonel Steever of the Fourth United States cavalry protested to both armies against the fire into American territory and it lessened considerably thereafter.

Nearly 1,000 American troops were massed on the border keeping crowds back and ready to respond to any orders from Washington.

Attempt to Arrange Armistice.

Courier are galloping back and forth in an effort to arrange an armistice so that peace negotiations may go on. General Francisco I. Madero, Jr., is a sad and downhearted man. His efforts to prevent a general attack were successful, but only after he had been bombarded with conflicting stories as to the actual cause of the conflict.

General Madero thinks remarks attributed to Colonel Tambourel of the federal garrison in Juarez, taunting the insurrectos, incensed them, and in a statement he regrets the occurrence.

The fight lasted until dark and furnished many a thrilling spectacle as well as continuous terror for many Americans living along the river bank.

The total dead for the day's fighting, including insurrectos and federals, is estimated at near thirty. The wounded will number close to sixty.

The Diaz manifesto is gradually losing its effect and the insurrectos are determined to fight. They believe they can take Juarez with ease as their advance guard has, it is reported, completely routed the federal outposts.

FIVE LEGISLATORS INDICTED

Grand Jury Probes Scandal in Ohio Assembly.

Columbus, O., May 4.—Three state senators and two representatives were included in bribery indictments returned by the Franklin county grand jury, which has been engaged in investigating corruption in the assembly.

The senators are Isaac E. Huffman of Butler county, L. R. Andrews of Lawrence county and George K. Cetone of Montgomery county. The representatives are Dr. George B. Nye of Pike county and A. C. Lowry of Lawrence county.

One indictment was returned against each, charging the solicitation of bribes. In addition Rodney Diegle of Erie county, sergeant-at-arms in the senate and alleged go between in negotiations with senators, was indicted with the senators for aiding and abetting the bribe solicitation.

The indicted men appeared at the courthouse soon after the bills were returned and furnished bonds.

CRITICISES LABOR LEADERS

Roosevelt Writes Article on Los Angeles Case.

New York, May 5.—Former President Roosevelt will have a signed article in the Outlook this week in which he severely criticizes union labor leaders "who have at once flown publicly to the defense of the alleged dynamiters" under arrest in the Los Angeles Times case. Mr. Roosevelt pays tribute to Attorney Heney as a fair and fearless officer and extols Detective Burns as Heney's "right hand man."

DUEL IS FATAL TO TWO

Chicago Italians Fight to Death Over Woman.

Chicago, May 5.—Two Italians shot and killed each other in a pistol duel, following a quarrel over a woman. Salvatore La Morta, twenty-three years old, was instantly killed, while his assailant, who has not been identified, died on the way to a hospital.

Recommends Sugar Trust Probe.

Washington, May 9.—Investigation of the American Sugar Refining company and all other concerns engaged in the manufacture of refining sugar to ascertain whether or not there have been violations of the anti-trust law was recommended by the house committee on rules.

The Other Side.

"It's all very well for the minister to preach from the text, 'Remember Lot's wife,'" said an overworked, discouraged matron, "but I wish he would now give us an encouraging sermon upon the wife's lot."

The Puzzle.

A Boston girl, who was watching a farmer milk a cow, adjusted her glasses and said, "It is all very plain except that I don't understand how you turn it off."

A WIDOW WITH MONEY

By M. QUAD.

Copyright, 1911, by Associated Literary Press.

Moses Bliss was an old fashioned man. Most folks called him an old "codger."

All at once, when Moses had passed his sixty-second birthday, and was telling himself that he felt as good as the day he was thirty, and had every prospect of living to be a hundred years old, a doctor told him that his left lung was going, and that he must make tracks for a higher altitude at once. Moses was mad as well as scared. He called the doctor all kinds of fools, vowed he wouldn't move a rod, and then set out for Beacon Hill, a hundred miles away.

The higher you can get above the sea the better for your left lung and the more expensive the board. Beacon Hill was only a village, and had only one tavern, and that tavern charged Moses $5 a week for board. Of course he kicked. He called the landlord all sorts of names and said he would start for home next day, but he didn't start.

It was on one of his walks that he met the widow Archer. She had a hammer and nails and was nailing a board on the fence in front of her poor little home. He took the hammer away from her and made the board secure, and then walked off with only a grunt. He had noticed, however, that she was a woman of thirty-five and fairly good-looking, and he was pleased with her.

A call was made next day. He said he had come on business. He was no sooner seated than he asked:

"Look-a-here, widow, why haven't you married again?"

"Sir, you are taking a great liberty!" she replied.

"Come, now, I am here as a friend."

"But I don't know you!"

"But you soon will. I am Moses Bliss, up here to heal my left lung, and I wouldn't marry you or any other woman on earth. I've just got a little scheme in my head, and I want you to help me work it out. It's a scheme for your benefit."

The widow saw that he was an eccentric. She rather timidly consented to hear him, and he said:

"I want to ask the same question over again. "Why haven't you married a second time?"

"Suppose—suppose I haven't been asked?" she blushingly replied.

"That's it, eh? Haven't been here two weeks yet, and I've heard of a dozen widowers and bachelors about here. Don't jump now. You are young. You are as good looking a woman as I've seen in town. I've no doubt you can cook and manage a house as well as the best of them. I can see only two reasons why you are a widow after four years. Did you vow never to marry again?"

"I—I can't say I did, though I had one of the best of husbands. I don't think we ought to talk about it."

"Then if you didn't vow it's because you are a widow of small means, and these avaricious villains around here want to marry money."

"Yes; I am poor."

"Widow, I want to lend you $100 in cash," said Moses as he counted it out.

"But I can never pay it back, and you are a stranger. I—I think you had better go."

"Widow, here's the hundred. When I want it, ten or fifteen years from now, I'll call for it. Meanwhile buy you some new clothes. You'll soon be hearing that you are a widow with money. Keep a close tongue. Admit nothing; deny nothing. Just be serene."

"But I can't go on deceiving folks," she protested.

"You go right on saying nothing and leave things in the hands of Providence."

The widow found it hard to understand what Moses was driving at, but she retained the $100. Within three days the plot began to develop. Her neighbors began to come in and congratulate her on having money. The county paper came out with a hint that a certain worthy widow had been left a legacy, and the editor was glad of it. It was known all over the village that in buying a new hat for $5 she had offered a ten dollar bill to be changed. The widow wanted to deny the reports, but she remembered the caution she had received.

It wasn't two weeks before a widower called. He didn't say a word about the rumors. Indeed, he fought shy of the money question. He just said that he had been a lonesome widower for five long years and was getting tired of it.

One day Moses Bliss dropped in to say:

"Just keep serene and saw wood. Things is working."

"But these men are coming because they want to marry me," replied the widow.

"For sure. Let 'em come and take your pick."

And a month later, when he returned and made his call, he noticed that the widow was confused and flustrated.

"Well, which is it?" he asked.

"It's a—a widower. He says he's loved me for two years. But I must tell him that I've not got a lot of money."

"Sure, but he's said that he loved you for yourself alone, hasn't he?"

"Yes."

"Then he can't go back on himself. It takes money to start love, but when it gets to going it keeps right on. Say yes and keep serene."

And Beacon Hill will tell you that it turned out a happy marriage and that Moses Bliss got his left lung back.

HABEAS CORPUS SUSTAINED

Millionaire Packer Need Not Produce Books in Lorimer Probe.

Chicago, May 7.—Judge A. J. Petit, in the circuit court, declared that the Illinois senate could not force inspection of the private accounts of Edward Tilden. His decision, having this effect, was to uphold the writ of habeas corpus obtained by Tilden, G. W. Benedict and W. C. Cummings after they had been arrested on charges of contempt of the state senate, in refusing to present the accounts to the Helm committee.

Tilden was named by Clarence Funk, of the International Harvester company, as a person to whom he was directed to send a check for $10,000 to make up a fund of $100,000 alleged to have been used in electing United States Senator William Lorimer.

HOUSE APPROVES FREE LIST BILL

Twenty-four Republicans Join Democrats in Its Favor.

Washington, May 9.—Nine hours of continuous pounding at the hands of the Republican minority of the house of representatives failed to make a single change in the first Democratic tariff bill, that placing on the free list agricultural implements, meats and many other articles. The bill passed the house by a vote of 236 to 109, the Democrats voting solidly and mustering twenty-four Republicans with them.

Minority Leader Mann threw amendment after amendment into the debate, ranging all the way from free rice to free lead and pig iron; but those that were not ruled out of order were cheerfully voted down by an almost solid Democratic vote.

The Republicans who voted for the measure were Representatives Anderson, Davis, Lindbergh, Miller, Volstead and Steenerson of Minnesota; Anthony, Jackson, Madison, Murdock of Kansas; Hanna and Helgeson of North Dakota; Lenroot, Kopp, Morse, Nelson of Wisconsin; La Follette and Warburton of Washington; Lafferty of Oregon; Kemp of California; Hubbard of Iowa; Morgan of Oklahoma; Norris of Nebraska and Roberts of Nevada.

The Fisher sank with a big hole amidships in a few minutes. A boat from the Clement rescued the remainder of the Fisher's crew, who jumped overboard in their night clothing.

In all a fund of $100,000 may be raised to carry on the work until the first of the year. An executive secretary to carry out the projects of the league will be chosen at a meeting of the executive board to be held within the next month.

The officers of the league elected are: President, Lewis Penwell, Helena; treasurer, H. C. Sampson, Spokane; vice presidents, L. M. Newman, Montana; Senator Fox, Idaho; Dennis W. King, Washington; William Hanley, Oregon; J. H. Dight, Minnesota; Governor Vessey, South Dakota, and John Bruegger, North Dakota.

Executive Board—R. W. Reynolds, Montana; W. M. Morgan, Idaho; R. R. Wilson, Washington; C. C. Chapman, Oregon; C. L. Kluckhohn, Minnesota; E. Y. Sarles, North Dakota; South Dakota to be filled later by the president.

The meeting was unusually successful and free from efforts to introduce politics. A spirit of co-operation predominated throughout and the indications are that great good will be accomplished for the seven states that have joined in the conference.

Adopts Strong Resolutions.

A strong set of resolutions was adopted by the conference, recommending the organization of auxiliary development leagues in the states and in the various towns to work in harmony with the league.

That the present interests of the railroads and people are in harmony and that unanimity of action between them is vital to the development of this section.

That the league favors extensive advertising of the Northwest.

That all the states interested should provide state departments of immigration.

Urging the enactment of publicity bills and the appropriation of money for publicity by the states in the league.

Urging the extension of agricultural education in secondary and elementary schools and commending the operation of demonstration trains of the Northwest products by railroads.

Urging the government to aid in opening the great waterways of the country by bond issues, if necessary, and commending country life movements, such as playgrounds, parks and community centers.

Opposing the withdrawal of natural resources by the federal government when such resources are needed to properly develop the country adjacent thereto and favoring a modification of the conservation policy of the government to conform to these principles.

WIND FANS CANADIAN FIRES

Many Small Towns Are in Danger of Destruction.

Winnipeg, May 9.—Swept by a high wind forest fires are raging in Northern Manitoba and Saskatchewan and along the international boundary, which threaten a repetition of last fall's disasters.

Many small towns and large saw mills along the Canadian Northern railway are in danger and hundreds of men are fighting the flames. The Canadian Northern has several relief trains ready for operation and has sent a train to Kelwood, which was in danger. Fires are burning fiercely at Swan River, Dauphin and at the foot of Riding mountains. Many settlers have lost everything, bridges have been destroyed and miles of telegraph poles have been burned.

The situation in the Prince Albert district is alarming. The fires did considerable damage on the outskirts of Hudson Bay Junction and Wafeking. Chief Wagner and part of the Prince Albert fire brigade are still fighting the flames at Big River.

SUCCUMBS TO LONG ILLNESS

Former Senator Kittredge Dies at Hot Springs, Ark.

Hot Springs, Ark., May 5.—Former Senator Kittredge of South Dakota died here after being unconscious forty-eight hours.

A brother announced that he and his sister would accompany the body to Kent, N. H., where it will be interred in the family burial grounds.

Senator Kittredge was fifty years of age.

Astrology and War.

It has been stated on what is said to be good authority that a representative of the Prussian government asked of a French astrologer the proper time to pick a quarrel with France. After carefully comparing horoscopes of high officials he answered that any hour in the afternoon as near as possible midway between the 9th and 14th of July, 1870. On the 11th of July William snubbed Benedetti, the French emissary, and on the 12th friendly relations ceased.

HISTORICAL PAGEANT.

Minnesota's History from Earliest Says to Present Time are Shown.

Minnesota's history from the days when Indians rode the plains and the buffalo abounded in countless numbers up to the present day of fertile farms speeding trains, automobiles and trolley cars and the rush of buisness and manufacturing activity, were faithfully portrawey in the pageant which was shown last week in the St. Paul Auditorium.

Students of the St. Paul Institute School of Art, under the instruction of Lee Woodward Zeigler, directors, painted the scenes for the spectacle, pupils of Central High School, St. Paul, played the parts of Indian chiefs and braves, while members of the Balder Club, an organization of young men who are proud of their Viking blood, were the pioneers of the state's wild and wooly days. Girls prominent in the society of Minnesota's capital city lent their grace and beauty to scenes in which Indian maids had their part.

Twelve tribes of Redskins were represented in the pageant and the high school boys put all the power of thei lungs into the once' blood-curdling yells of the savage. A famous massacre was reproduced and the war dances and songs given with realistic effect.

The first scene of the spectacle was laid in the Red Pipestone quarries and showed the voice of the Good Spirit, giving, in the words of Longfellow, a warning which caused the savages to cease their war dance and light and smoke their calumets. In the second scene there was more dancing and smoking.

The beginning of the second act was the signal for the entrance of the young men of Viking ancestry who form the Balder Club. They were under the direction of P. W. Jacobson, the Goths and Norwegians appearing with spears and axes and other rude instruments of the olden days of the Northwest. A score of them departed to hunt and fish while several remained to make their camp. The bard of the stay-at-homes sang the saga of the North, with Scandinavian musical instruments for accompaniment, but the gathering was thrown into turmoil by the war whoop of Indians. With piercing cries and brandishing tomahawks a band of Redskins swoops down upon the Vikings camp and when their work was completed not a white man was left alive. The hunters return, find thei companions slain and while they chant their lamentation, erect a Rune stone.

Minnehaha and Hiawatha appeared in Act 3. Doctor Eastman, one of the most prominent Indians in the country, a man who has given much study to the tribal relations and conditions of his race, needing little in the way of makeup except as to his dress, played the part of Hiawatha while Miss Maud Borup played Minnehaha. The scene is laid at famous Minnehaha Falls near St. Paul and the Indian flirtation that was carried on between Minnehaha and Hiawatha as the latter purchases arrows from an old arrow maker, was as true to life as such a scene would be in a present day ballroom.

In Act 4 was shown the coming of the voyageurs with Radison and Grosselliers trading furs with the Indians. Father Hennepin and the band of Indians who have captured him appear and the savages manifest great interest in the white man's arms, food and trinkets and above all the cross they carry. The next tableau portrays the discovery of St. Anthony Falls, Father Hennepin blessing and christening them. Two tableaux following show LeSuer giving their first guns to the Indians and Jonathan Carver making a treaty with the red men.

Passing from Indian times to more modern days the pageant is brought up to the time of the Civil War to show the part Minnesota played in the struggle between North and South. The presentation of silk colors to the First Minnesota regiment by Mrs. Ramsey is shown in one tableau while another presents the troops departing for the seat of war. Real members of the G. A. R. held the stage in a scene showing the return of the soldiers.

The eighth act shows the passing of the Indian from Minnesota, children in the dance of the moccasin flower concluding the act. Modern Minnesota was portrayed in the ninth and last act by figure and groups, costumed to represent the natural and commercial wealth of the state, and typifying agriculture, mining, dairy products, lumber, quarries and other products.

The pageant was outlined by Mrs. C. A. Severance and elaborated by Mrs. Lee Woodward Zeigler. Mrs. Herbert Davis was chairman of the committee on arrangements and all of the art work and spectacles was under the direction of Lee Woodward Zeigler, who recently came from New York to be director of the art school. Miss Lily Long composed the epic poem which was recited between acts by Mrs. Lena G. Barrows as the spirit of Minnesota.

LONG JOURNEY IN AUTOMOBILES

Charles Harrington, Pathfinder' Started Wednesday in A "Halladay 40" for Helena.

St, Paul, Minn., May 10.—Charles Harrington, secretary of the Minnesota State Automobile Association, accompanied by several correspondents in a specially equipped Halladay "04", started today on the pathfinding journey for the Twin City to Helena, Mont., auto tour in July.

The pathfinding trip will be watched with considerable interest by automobilists all over the country, as with the Glidden tour abandoned this year, the Minnesota Association's tour is the longest to be made in this country in 1911. This tour not only is the longest for this year, but it is the most unique journey in automobile ever attempted.

No other tour ever was accompanied by a "hotel train." Louis W. Hill, president of the Great Northern Railway Company, an enthusiastic motorist, is responsible for this feature of the trip. Mr. Hill has made arrangements to have a special train of the finest sleepers, buffet and dining cars in his road's service, keep pace with the automobiles, and in addition will equip one or two baggage cars as garages. The private cars of Mr. Hill and John Ringling will be attached to the train. It is expected that 200 machines, coming from all parts of the country will enter the tour and take advantage of the unusual comforts that are offered.

When the machines start out in the morning the special train will move forward to the town where the stop for the night is scheduled. Having completed their day's journey the motorists will find dinner ready in the dining cars, there will be every kind of refreshment their stomachs may crave, and in the garage cars the chauffeurs will have at hand every equipment they may want for making repairs and cleaning their machines. As several trophies are offered recognized rules for such tours will be enforced, but any autoist may go on the trip without being a contestant for the prizes.

After a night's rest in the sleepers, which will be sidetracked in a quiet spot with the automobiles parked around them and carefully guarded, breakfast will be served and the journey resumed. In this way the autoists will make their way across the great wheat fields of Minnesota and North Kakota and will enter the mountainous country of Montana, "the Switzerland of America."

When the travelers reach Great Falls, Mont., that part of their journey which will require real skill in the manipulation of steering wheel, brake and gear, will have been reached. Here the drivers will encounter mountain trails that will demand the closest attention and the "tenderfoot" Easterner, used to flat country and boulevards, will drive into thrillers that will test his skill and nerve. Precautions are to be taken however, that no accidents shall mar the pleasure of the trip and pilots from Montana Automobile clubs who are accustomed to the roads will be stationed along the route to guide those less experienced. There will be no danger of dashes over precipices or anything of that kind, so long as the driver uses good judgment and attends to his business. Arrangements will be made to see that none is left out on the trail at night among the bears and wolves. At Great Falls the autoists will be amazed to find a garage that will hold 212 cars. It was built by a millionarie ranch owner and with its complete equipment will be at the service of the tourists. Indian dances and cowboy stunts at two or three places along the route will furnish amusement and diversion for the travelers.

The distance from St. Paul, the estarting point, to Helena is close to 1300 miles, but with the side trips to Yellowstone Park and other beauty spots of the mountains, the distance traveled will be considerably increased. It is arranged that all who do not want to return to St. Paul in their machines may ship the cars back from Helena to this city for $50. The cost of the service on the "hotel train" will be no more than that of stopping in a good hotel.

The tentative plan fr the pathfinding trip, begun by Mr. Harrington today, calls for a run of 174 miles to Ashby the first day; 105 miles to Grand Forks the next day; 158 miles to Ruby, N. D., the third day; 198 miles to Williston the fourth day; 172 mies to Glasgow the fifth; 168 miles to Havre the sixth; 136 miles to Great Falls the seventh and 146 miles to Helena the eighth and last day.

The Last Luxury.

Ten-year-old Arthur had been telling impressively of the number of servants employed in his home. He continued, "And our house is fixed so that if you want a drink or a window raised or to go upstairs or anything all you have to do is to pull a chain."

"But what do you want with so many servants in that sort of a house?" asked one of his hearers.

"Oh," replied Arthur, "we have the servants to pull the chains."—Judge.

SAYS PACT WILL HELP FARMERS

President Discusses Agreement With Rural Callers.

PROSPERITY ABOVE POLITICS

Twenty-five Members of the National Grange Visit White House to Protest Against Trade Arrangement With Canada—President Taft Reiterates His Belief Farmers Will Greatly Benefit by the Agreement.

Washington, May 9.—Placing prosperity above politics President Taft told farmers who called on him to object to the passage of the Canadian reciprocity treaty that it wouldn't hurt them a little bit—and even if it should it could be repealed by any congress as soon as the harmful effects were shown. To twenty-five members of the national grange the president said he wasn't playing for votes and if the passage would alienate Republican farmers of Minnesota and other border states he really couldn't help it—he was convinced the treaty would be a good thing for the country and he was going to stand by his guns.

N. P. Hull, spokesman for the farmers, argued that reciprocity means less money for wheat and other products—"a halt in the improvement of our homes and the education of our children."

"In the past the farmers of the border states have been the backbone of protection," he said. "You could count on these people every time. No past president commanded the confidence of the farm people more than you, and I ask you if you do not think we will suffer if we are put on a free trade basis."

"I have no disposition," said the president, "to interfere with the prosperity of those who make up the bone and sinew of the nation—the farmers—and I am convinced that in no way am I interfering with it. I believe that after reciprocity has been given one year's trial no side will think of interfering with it.

"I believe this treaty to be the best thing for the country—farmers, merchants, laboring men and all—because I believe it is contrary to nature, it is flying in the face of Providence, to put an artificial teriff wall between this country and Canada. If we take down that wall we will sell more products to Canada than she will sell to us. When you, gentlemen, come to see the result I believe you will admit that you have been wrong in your fears and that I have been right."

How Cloves Are Cultivated.

Cloves are now cultivated in many tropical regions. A clove tree begins to bear at the age of ten years and continues until it reaches the age of seventy-five years. There are two crops a year, one in June and another in December. The tree is an evergreen and grows from forty to fifty feet high, with large oblong leaves and crimson flowers at the end of small branches in clusters of from ten to twenty. The tree belongs to the same botanical order as the guava. The cloves, which are the undeveloped buds, are at first white, then light green and at the time of gathering bright red. Pieces of white cloth are spread under the trees at harvesting time, and the branches are beaten gently with bamboo sticks until the cloves drop. They are dried in the sun, being tossed about daily until they attain the rich dark color that proclaims them ready for shipment.—Harper's Weekly.

The Original Paul Pry.

Thomas Hill, familiarly called Tommy Hill, was, says Dr. Brewer, the original Paul Pry. It was from him also that Theodore Hook drew his character of Gilbert Gurney. Planche in his "Recollections" says of Hill: "His specialty was the accurate information he could impart on all the petty details of the domestic economy of his friends, the contents of their wardrobes, their pantries, the number of pots of preserves in their store closets and of the table napkins in their linen presses, the dates of their births and marriages, the amounts of their tradesmen's bills and whether paid weekly or quarterly. He had been on the press and was connected with the Morning Chronicle. He used to drive Matthews crazy by ferreting out his whereabouts when he left London and popping the information in some paper."

Names In Electricity.

Electricity is the one branch of science that honors the great names in its fundamental terminology. Andre Marie Ampere was the French physicist who first measured the current and for whom the unit is named. The ohm bears the name of George S. Ohm, a German man of science who discovered the law on which the unit of electrical resistance is based. The volt is named for the Italian Volta, the greatest electrical authority of the eighteenth century, who was the first man to construct a rude electric battery. The farad, the unit of electrical capacity, is named in honor of the English physicist Faraday; the colomb, the unit of quantity, for the French physicist Coulomb, and the watt, the unit of power, for James Watt, the Scotch inventor who improved the steam engine.

"I had several hemorrhages of the lungs. The doctors did not help me much and would never have cured me.

H. Clay Calhoun, testifying in an assault case, spoke of one Washington White as "well off."

"Now, witness," said the cross examining lawyer, "when you declare White to be well off, what do you mean? Is he worth $10,000?"

"No, sah. Oh, no, sah," said Calhoun.

"Is he worth $5,000?"

"No, sah. Mah, gracious, no!"

"Is he worth $1,000?"

Couldn't Understand It.

"This stock," said the promoter, "is fully paid up and nonassessable."

"Well, if it's fully paid up," replied the man who was inexperienced in such matters, "I can't see why you want me to put money into it. Would not that be unfair to the people who paid it up?"—Chicago Record-Herald.

Force Yourself to Be Well.

"Plant your feet firmly and squarely on the ground, throw back your shoulders, fold your arms and affirm in most emphatic terms that you are strong, healthy and well. Do this for a few minutes every evening, and, even if this is not how you actually feel, maintain by your physical and mental attitude that it is your condition, and you will soon find that it becomes so and that you are not really telling lies." This was the advice given by Dr. J. Stenson Hooker in a lecture on "Posturing and Posing For Health" at the simple life conference and exhibition in London. "It is wonderful to what extent our state of health can be altered in this way," Dr. Hooker added. "It stirs up the currents of feeling which act on the nerves. These act on the blood vessels, and thus the whole system is improved, and we become different beings."

Astrology and War.

It has been stated on what is said to be good authority that a representative of the Prussian government asked of a French astrologer the proper time to pick a quarrel with France. After carefully comparing horoscopes of high officials he answered that any hour in the afternoon as near as possible midway between the 9th and 14th of July, 1870. On the 11th of July William snubbed Benedetti, the French emissary, and on the 12th friendly relations ceased.

THE FORCE OF HABIT

By C. ROBBINS ANDREWS

Copyright by American Press Association, 1911.

There was revolution in Mexico. General Alvares was suspected by the president and closely watched. One day a visitor called at the general's headquarters.

"General," said the visitor, taking a manuscript package from his pocket, "knowing your reputation as a man of literary taste, a critic of the highest order"—

"Cut that out," interrupted Alvarez. "I was once chief reader for a publishing house."

"I see. I have here a book of poems"—

"Poems of any kind are not available. We have a whole room full of—Excuse me; the force of habit is great. I was thinking I was back in the editorial sanctum."

"But these poems of mine," continued the visitor, "I consider to be in that lighter vein which is the only kind of poetry now popular."

"Have you tried the Mexican Popular Magazine?"

"General," replied the visitor impressively after a pause, "if you have been an editor I have been a contributor. I'm on to that honeyed fashion of getting rid of 'an author.'"

The general settled back in his chair as one bracing himself to hear an author's reason why his experience is more valuable than other experiences. Those in the room went about their various duties. The visitor met the general's eye and winked at him. The latter caught on.

"These poems," continued the man with the manuscript, "were composed during a period of deep feeling. The spring was coming on and nature was awakening."

"You can wake me when you get through," yawned the general.

"One word more. Tearful April, with its clouds and thin gilded linings, had passed into June, and the roses were unfolding their delicate petals."

The general closed his eyes.

"I seized my pen and yielding to the balmy"—

The general snored. The visitor looked about him and, seeing that the others in the room were becoming infected with the drowsiness that had fallen upon their chief, laid his manuscript on the table and silently withdrew.

As soon as the door had closed behind the author the general awoke.

"Has he gone?" he asked with a shudder.

"Yes, general."

Taking up the manuscript Alvarez remarked:

"He has put his address on it, but I don't see any stamps for its return. However, here's a mem stating that he will call tomorrow."

That night Alvarez took the manuscript home with him. He was not interested in the literary form, or in the meter of the verse. Even the divine afflatus, if it was there, failed to move him. He puzzled for hours trying to find a key to a secret message. At last, by skipping all but every tenth word, he succeeded. He was invited to join the revolutionists, carrying with him the force under his command. For so doing he was to be appointed minister of war.

Having read all of the message he could find to read, and being satisfied that there was no more of it, he wrote his acceptance of the proposition and laid down his plan of operations by making a dot over the words required to make up his message. This done at daybreak, in the morning he went to bed. When the author came the next day for his manuscript the general said to him:

"I am very much obliged to you for your kind permission to read your beautiful poems. I have not been struck so forcibly with the poetic fervor of any manuscript in many years. In these verses is the very soul of poetry. But in"—

"Never mind that," said the author. "I have heard it a million times before. I know what you're coming to."

"Oh, I forgot," replied the general. "I am not now in the position of a publisher; you wish simply my honest individual literary opinion. Well, your poems are tommyrot. There is neither versification nor feeling nor thought in them. But I'll make a suggestion. They are so bad that if you can make them a little worse and start a few of them in some publication intended to be popular, with a curious story about the author, I'm not sure but you could get a big sum for them."

"Thank you, general, for your very practical advice."

The general threw the manuscript at the author, telling him to get out, and if he ever came again on such a matter he would have him arrested and his poetic ambition cut off by the garrote.

The young man caught the package and, departing, made his way to the commander of the insurgent army. Laying the pages on a table, the message of General Alvarez was quickly deciphered. A few days later at dawn the rebels moved on the government works and were joined by the troops of General Alvarez. The revolution was accomplished, and Alvarez was made minister of war, according to the agreement.

Later the deposed president asked the new one how he had managed to communicate with Alvarez. He was informed of the plan. The young man who accomplished it was made a cabinet minister.

The Other Side.

"It's all very well for the minister to preach from the text, 'Remember Lot's wife,'" said an overworked, discouraged matron, "but I wish he would now give us an encouraging sermon upon the wife's lot."

The Puzzle.

A Boston girl who was watching a farmer milk a cow adjusted her glasses and said: "It is all very plain except that I don't understand how you turn it off."

Jinks' Romance

A Civil War Vet's Tale

By F. A. MITCHEL

Copyright by American Press Association, 1911.

"Jinks," said one of a party of civil war veterans to a comrade, whose bald head shot out a few spears of white hair and whose gums always met when he closed his jaws, "why didn't you never git married?"

Jinks uncrossed his legs, recrossed them the other way and said:

"There's a romance in my life."

"A romance! You don't mean to say there's any romance or ever has been in you! It wouldn't be nat'r'l to you."

"I wasn't always like I am now, no more'n you fellers. I was sleek enough when we was fighting Johnny Rebs."

"Well, tell us about your romance."

"It began when we was goin' up that long slant at Ferdericksburg. If ever there was a place particularly cal'cl'ated to mow down men and have plenty of time to do it, that inclined plane takes the cake. It's nearly fifty year since we was led up there, and nobody hain't yit found out who was responsible. Mr. Lincoln warn't no soldier, but if he'd seen he'd known it was a good slaughter pen and nothin' else.

"Me and Bob Aker was trudgin' along side by side, expectin' either one or t'other would drop. We was bosom friends. All of a suddint Bob pitched forward. I dropped out and bent over him. He just had time before he fell on t'other side to stretch out a hand with a ring on it and say:

"'Take it to Sue and tell her I want her to marry you instead of me.'

"I pulled the ring off his finger, and he died while I was a doin' it. Slippin' the thing on my own finger, I got up and hurried along to my regiment, though even in this short time the place where we'd been was as wide as a church door.

"Bob had had plenty of time to tell me all that was necessary, for he'd told me the rest often before. Laws, how the boy did talk about that gal! She was the loveliest thing on earth, so good, so gentle, so lovin'. Then he would say: 'It nearly kills me to think that I may git killed down here and some other feller'll take my place with her. If any man does I want you to be her husband, Bill. If I knew she was goin' to you it wouldn't seem so bad.' He'd often showed me the ring she'd given him, and he'd given her one in exchange.

"I was powerful affected by all this, seein' Bob killed right beside me and his turnin' the gal he couldn't have himself over to me. I tell you I was all broke up."

The old man took out his handkerchief, blew his nose and incidentally touched his eyes with the wipe.

"Oh, don't get maudlin', Jinks!"

"I came out o' that slaughter all right, and as soon as I'd got Bob a trifle out o' my mind I fell to dreamin' o' his gal. I'd go over plans to break the news of Bob's message and all about it, I wondered if I could persuade her to take me instead o' Bob and how long I'd be a-doin' it. There'd be lots o' delicacy required, and I didn't know how a rough chap like me could git down to it. The only thing I could do would be to do the best I could. I kind a thort that a good deal depended on my gittin' the gal, for I had some hold on her—Bob had made the request—and I didn't have a hold on any other gal and no prospect o' havin' any other hold.

"The war ended at last, and I'd 'a' gone straight to Bob's gal, but I was mustered out far from her home, and I didn't have no money to buy a ticket with. Besides, I was out at the seat o' the britches. So I had to go to work to git the cash. Of course when I got a place I couldn't git my employer to let me go off courtin' a gal whose heart was like enough buried down in Virginia. Anyway, I didn't like to ask him, and so I kep' a-puttin' the thing off and puttin' it off till a number of years went by. All this time I was pinin' for the wife that I was expectin' to git."

"By gum, Jinks, you air givin' us a romance, ain't you?"

"It was ten years before I got round to goin' to give Bob Akers' message.

"I remember mighty well the day I went to the town she lived in, a village in a valley. I found the house, a little cottage with wistaria"—

"Oh, cut out them embellishments."

"There was a man standin' on the corner, with his hands in his pockets, chawin' tobacco. I went up to him, and to open conversation I asked him for a chaw. He give it to me, and then I asked if he knew Bob's gal. He said he'd known her ever since she was knee high to a duck. Then I told him that I was beside Bob Akers when he was killed and he had sent a ring and a message by me.

"'What was the message?' the man asked.

"I kind o' wanted to get somebody to help me carry this load o' romance that was breakin' me down, so I showed him the ring and told him the hull story. He jist fixed me and stood looking into my eyes, and I knew that somep'n was workin' in his mind.

"'Young man,' he said, impressive like, 'Bob Akers' girl married me a month before Bob was killed. If you want to give her the ring and relieve me I hain't no objection to your doin' it. You may have fought in the war, but you can't wrastle with her—no man can.'"

"For heaven's sake, Jinks, is that your romance?"

"He's made it out of whole cloth. The reason he hain't got a wife is 'cause he couldn't git one."

While They Detect.

"Every criminal is sure to leave a number of clews behind him."

"Yes, indeed," replied the old police officer. "I suspect that some of them leave as many as possible behind so as to keep the detectives theorizing while they catch a steamboat."—Washington Star.

HOW A BREWERY CONTROLLED LEGISLATURE SPENT MONEY

DETAILED STATEMENT OF THE EXPENDITURES OF THE LAST LEGISLATURE.

Enormous Sum of $135.000 Spent for office Supplies, Employees Salaries and Other Unnecessaries. Ruthless Disregard For Tax Payers Who Pay the Bills.

Thousands and Thousands of Dollars Spent for Pocket Knives, Fountain Pens, Scissors, Jugs, Tumblers, Matches, Match Safes, Carpet Sweepers, Hair Brushes, etc

Unparalled Extravagance Topped by Appropriations that Will Increase State Tax Rate Over 100 Per Cent. Cost Over $4,500 Per Day For Salaries etc.

(The following article upon legislative expense is taken from the last issue of The Long Prairie Leader and we reproduce it entire as we think it is of interest to our readers.

What has Brewery domination of Minnesota politics cost the peole of the state? This can not always be demonstrated in figures and dollars but a study of the expense account of the legislature which has just adjourned will give the people an idea of what it means to them to permit the liquor interests to control their law making body.

The facts are shocking. They will dumfound and appal the most indifferent and calloused of our citizens. The session has been characterized by the most outrageous petty grafting and the expense account has been swelled by the purchase of thousands of dollars worth of unnecessaries.

Do you know that the session just adjourned, a session controlled and dominated by the Brewery intrests cost the people of the state $349,000? Did you know that this was the expense incurred for a session that lasted only ninety days and contained but seventy seven working days?

Did you know that of this vast sum, $135,000 was eaten up by salaries of employees and bills for office supplies and stationery?

Did you know that the legislature gave employment to nearly as many clerks and door keepers as there were members and that with the exception of fifteen pages, none were paid less than $5 per day and many of them as high as $7 and $10 per day?

The legislature appropriated approximately $16,584,977 67. In order to raise this sum the next two years, the state tax levy will have to be increased about one hundred per cent.

Did you know that the bill for pocket knives that this legislature bought and which you will have to pay amounted to more than $1200?

Did you know that the members authorized the purchase of nearly $2,000 worth of fountain pens and that the total number of pens bought would, if evenly distributed, have given four pens to each member?

Did you know that the legislature voted to make you buy the members their matches, match safes, key rings, shoe blacking, shoe brushes, hair combs, hair brushes, etc. etc. and that these items cost you nearly $300?

Did you know that they used your money to buy law books to the amount of $1,455.90 and that after the session was ended every volume but one was taken home by certain members?

Did you know that you bought two pairs of scissors for every legislative member (that is, if the number bought was distributed evenly which they of course were not) and that you paid $334.70 for them?

Did you know that while the crowd that controlled the legislature were killing the laws that you wanted passed they were voting to have you pay for $45,000 worth of office supplies and stationery, an enormous quantity of which was not neededand a large part of which they had absolutely no moral right to make you pay?

Did you know that after the session adjourned all of the stationery and supplies left and everything movable and not nailed down was carried away and to the homes of the petty grafters?

Did you know that of this vast quantity of supplies paid for, but a small quantity comparatively was used by the members in session, and that of the balance there is now in the custody of the Capitol custodian goods to the value of approximately $154?

"I pledge myself to see that a policy of strictest economy is maintained in the matter of handling the peoples money"——extract from plank of any legislative candidate last fall.

Perhaps the extra knives were bought so the members could whittle the above inscription off their plank.

Do you realize that this means another bill for equippment for you to pay, two years hence?

You know now that this brewery controlled law making body throttled and strangled about every reform measure you hoped to see enacted into statute but did you understand too that with you helplessly forced to pay all expense they might vote, they took occasion to stock up on personal effects to the extent of thousands of dollars?

What's expense when the people are paying the bills?

If you do nt know these things, it is time you were finding them out because unless you wake up and take steps to head off these special interest controlled politicans there is going to be a repetition in succeding legislatures of the grafting The Leader now exposes

How The Leader Got The Facts.

Knowing that the Brewery organization had run riot throughout the session and noting from a regular reading of the Senate and House Journals that expenses were being recklessly piled up, The Leader resolved to make an investigation of the matter for thebenefit of the tax payers of the state. The Leader believed that if the people could be shown by official figures just what had been done with their money and by men who had sworn to protect the interests of their constituents, that an aroused public sentiment would not subside until there had been a general cleaning out and the conditions remedied by the sending of men to the legislature in the future who were honest and above petty grafting. Accordingly the editor of The Leader went to St.Paul last Thursday and put in two days and a night going over the records in the state auditor's office. With the assistance of stenographers arranged for, we were in thetime mentioned able to secure the figures we publish today.

These figures speak for themselves. They tell a story of headless, reckless, inexcusable extravagance that borders dangerously close to the criminal and if the facts as here divulged, facts borne out by the figures taken from official records, do not arouse the people of the state to the enormity of the situation, it will be only because the aggregation of cheap grafters who controlled the legislature actually represent the people.

We can not belive that civic patriotism and political righteousness have sunk to so low an ebb in Minnesota. Rather do we believe that the people having received this concrete and actual demonstration of what a Brewery controlled legislature is capable of doing, will, with the 1911 experience to guide them, never again permit this selfish interest to control the politics of Minnesota.

They even carried away the spittoons.

Read The Expense Account.

We want our readers to read this entire item carefully. Lay away the paper if you do not have time today. It's important matter and as a voter and tax payer you ought to be acquainted with the information The Leader has secured for you. When you have read and studied the item, pass it on to your neighbor and then ask him to pass it on to his neighbor. Ask your neighbors if it pays to let the liquor interests control your politics. You are going to pay your taxes this month. As you step up to the Treasurer's window take along a copy of this week's Leader and as you contemplate the size of the tax bill you are asked to pay, study over the paper again. It will help you to understand where a share of your contribution is destined to go. From a strictly business standpoint——does Brewery control of our politics pay?

Salary Increases.

As you study over the official itemized expense accounts published herewith, note the matter of salary increases. The politicans all were taken care of——at your expense. Not content with voting the employees large salaries at the beginnig of the session, salaries that ranged from $5 to $10 per day, the men who controlled the legislature allowed dozens of needed bills to die for lack of time to consider them, but they took the time to pass bills increasing the salaries of their political hangers-on and henchmen who under the guise of tending doors and galleries were drawing $5 per day and more from the state.

Their Idea of Economy.

The House organization gave a concrete illustration of its idea of economy at the time it was voting extra pay to the employees. It seems that five scrub women had been engaged to come nights to scrub out after the day's session had adjourned. These widow women on their hands and knees toiled into the night cleaning up the tobacco juice, the cigar stubs and the litter that accumulated during the day and at the close of the session each put in a bill for the modest sum of $45 for the work. Shocked by the amount asked for and remembering their promises of economy to their constituencies the organization promptly cut the bill to $32——and then immediately voted to raise the salaries of the Sargeants at Arms to $7 50 per day for the entire session. Only a calloused and sodden brewery controlled organization could have the nerve to try tomake up for its shameless exravagance in caring for its heelers by deducting from the hard earned wages of poor widow women.

The state tax levy for 1911 and 1912 will be 100 per cent more than for 1909 and 1910. Fountain pens "with gold bands and with members names engraved on each pen" come high and cost money.

The Furniture—

- 32 common ink wells
- 8 eyelet punches
- 35 common pen holders
- 6 copy holders
- 5 bill files
- 2 stamp affixers
- 1 protectograph

Everything else had evidently been carried away. This means that the people will be put to the expense of buying again what the next legislature needs in the way of office equippment etc. etc.

Will Raise the Tax Rate.

As a result of the management and action of the Brewery controlled legislature the state tax rate this year and next year will be increased one hundred per cent. The tendency of legislatures for many years in this state has been tocut down thestate tax levy, it having been found that the income from gross earnings taxes and other special taxes was increasing to the point where this income would wipe out the regular tax rate and render a sate tax unnecessary. The extravagence and reckless business management of the Brewery legislature was such that the state tax is to be raised from nine tenths of a mill to one and nine tenths mills for the years 1911 and 1912. The legislature of 1909 made the levy $1,200,000 a year for each of the years 1909 and 1910, and fixed the rate at not to exceed 1.2 mills. The State Auditor was able in 1910 to reduce this rate to nine tenths of a mill. The last legislature made a levy of one million dollars more for each of the years 1911 and 1912, bringing the total amount to be raised by direct taxation up to $2,200,000 and necessitating a tax rate of at least 1.9 mills. Thus the state tax rate for 1911 will be over 100 per cent more than it was in 1910. This legislature appropriated over sixteen million dollars.

When you walk up to the county Treasurer's wicket this month to pay your taxes, take along a copy of this issue of The Leader. A study of it will help you to understand where some of your contribution to the state is destined to go.

Reckless Business Methods

There seemed to be no system employed in the purchase of stationery, supplies and furniture. In no other way can the purchase of such unneccessary quantities of supplies be explained. If the amount and quantity of typewriter paper, carbon paper, pens, ink and other stationery that was paid for, was delivered, hey would have to build a small addition to the state house to care for it. The commonest of business rules seem to have been ignored. Is it possible that there was method in the lack of method? Do not the figures as presented by The Leader suggest that the Public Examiner's Department and the Attorney General's Department look into the matter a little So far as the records available show, no bids were asked for anything. All the goods seemed to have come from a certain few firms. Although great quantities were bought, no discounts were received. Straight prices prevailed. If a fountain pen sold for $4 the state seems to have paid $4 each for pens no matter if they were bought in dozen lots or hundred lots. A study of the figures will show that straight prices and no discount prevailed in every thing bought. If the supplies had been properly bought, hundreds if not thousands of dollars could have been saved.

What Speaker Dunn Thought of the Legislators

On the day of the close of thesession there was some speech making and the St. Paul Daily News reports Speaker Dunn's speech in part as follows:—

"I regard the House as being made up of very high-minded,clean and honorable men. They are all strong and resolute and naturally when they have differences on measures, the conflicts have been fierce and turbulent. However, I believe that all the members have acted with the best of motives and have endeavored to faithfully serve the people of the state. Forgetting all personalites, I am proud of the House and its membership. The members are a splendid body of fighters and again I want to say that I am proud of them."

Legislation that Failed

Moregood legislation failed of passage than in any other session of the legislature in many years. The Brewery interests headed off most all of the reform legislation and many bills that were absolutely necessary to the welfare of the state were secretely strangled in committees. Defeating good laws and spending the peoples money seemed to take the time of the organization. Do you want another Brewery legislature?

Some Good Men

There were many good men in the legislature but they were outnumbered by the members of the organization. The people had some of the hardest fighters on their side who ever stood up and battled in the legislature but they never had a show to overcome the power of the organization's steam roller. For instance Dr. Stone of our own district the last days of the session when extra salaries were being voted stood up for hours and fought to prevent the waste of money. They ran the steam roller over him until the roller was worn smooth but he bobbed up every time and came back just as strong. Votes counted, however, and the organization had the votes. The last day of the session Representative Conley introduced a resolution to investigate the matter of legislative expenses. The resolution was adopted and then the whole matter was sidetracked.

The last day of the session the members drew their salary for 1912 amounting to $92,000. A law was passed in 1909 permitting this to be done legally.

With the Organization

It is simply calling attention to a matter of record to mention that Representative Rice and Senator Johnston of our disrict were consistent and persistent friends of the organization. They helped establish the rules and their votes upheld the organization whenever the votes were needed.

Citizens of the 53rd district should remember that Senator Johnston and Representative Rice stood first, last and all the time with the legislative organization, the organization that made possible theexpense account itemized herewith.

Some of the lawyers in the legislature carried home $1,455.90 worth of law books which had been bought with the peoples money.

Possibly the knock down, drag out grew out of the efforts to divide the extra pocket knives.

It should be distinctly borne in mind that the legislative extravagance as set forth by these figures from the official records was not countenanced by all the members of the Senate and House. Many members fought against it and persistently stood for economy and business like methods but they were out numbered and out voted. Such men as Stone of Hubbard, Frankson of Fillmore, Robinson of Winona, Klemer of Faribault, J. N. Johnson of Yellow Medicine, Burnquist of Ramsey, Conley of Olmstead, Leeof Pope, Nolan of Hennepin, Rines of Kanebec, Cashman of Steele, Clague of Redwood, Gunderson of Douglas, Hackney of Ramsey, Johnson of Chisago, Lende of Marshall, Moonan of Waseca, O'Dell of Kandiyohi, Sageng of Otter Tail, Saugstad of Polk, Sundberg of Kittson and others conspicuously stood with the people and fought for their interests.

There were 145 gallery keepers, door keepers, cloakroom keepers, clerks, stenographers, and pages employed by the two houses. There were only 182 members so that there were nearly as many employees as there were members. These employees drew during the ninety day session the sum of $77,154.50. The necessary work could have been done by one third the number employed. The large majority of the employees were political hangers-on and the jobs were "created" in order to pay political debts. The people, however, paid the $77,154.50.

To any country printer——how would you like to have the job of furnishing letter heads at $8 per thousand in hundred thousand lots?

Notwithstanding the capitol is superbly equipped and that in 1909 session adjourned leaving adequate furniture for the use of a legislature, the records as itemized herewith show that the 1911 legislature bought an additional $3,183.25 worth of tables, desks, cases, etc. etc. Nothing but the very best was bought. Desks at $125 and chairs at $16 each, being the only kind that seemed to suit the taste of these servants who were handling the peoples money.

The ninety day session of the legislature cost the people of Minnesota $349,000 as follows:—

Salaries of members	$184,000
Salaries of help, jack knives, fountain pens, hair brushes, matches, etc. etc. as per itemized statement published herewith,	135,000
Printing expense	20,000

This is $1 09 a piece for every male voter who voted at the last election.

The itemized record herewith shows that approximately $40,000 worth of miscellaneous office supplies were bought by the legislature with the peoples money. The editor of The Leader personally checked up the supplies as returned to the office of the custodian of the Capitol and here is what is left:—

32 common ink wells
8 eyelet punches
6 copy holders
5 bill files
2 stamp affixers
1 protectograph
1 copy of code

Approximate value of goods returned by legislators, $154.

Athletics Versus Learning

Story of a Twirler and Tackler

By HUDSON C. EASTON

Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.

"Johnny," said Peter Weatherbee to his son when his boy left him in the mountains of Colorado to go east to college, "I want you to study your larnin' hard and don't give too much of your time to those games the boys play at college. Out here when an eddecated young man onct gets a start he can top those who haven't the eddecation. Now study hard and let the other things go."

When Johnny returned four years later his father was very much disappointed in his record. He had taken no honors, stood near the foot of his class, but was the athletic hero of the season. As a twirler he could send a ball that few could hit; as a tackler no man could get past him. Johnny's father was owner and editor of the Rocky Mountain Globe. But the paper during Johnny's sojourn at college had been running down. A rough element had come into the town, which had started with fine prospects, and so disturbed the condition of things that the better people were leaving, while no new respectable settlers were coming in.

"Father," said Johnny, "it seems to me that it's the duty of an editor to make it hot for evil wherever his paper is located."

"And get shot for doing it."

"Better be shot than let the other fellow take the bread and butter away from you. If the town dies our paper dies."

Peter Weatherbee consented that his son should write articles against the evil disposed, thus awakening the better class of citizens against them. Johnny began by inveighing against the indiscriminate carrying of weapons. Then he attacked certain men who ran gambling houses, with others who made offices of the said resorts.

"Johnny," said his father, "seems to me you've weakened yourself. You can't carry a revolver since you've come down on the practice, and these men you've been larrupin' 'll shoot you down like a dog."

"They won't go for me, father. I'm only an understrapper. They'll go for you, at least till they find out that I'm the man that's after them."

The next morning Johnny put his desk in a room through which all must go to his father's office. He had hardly got settled when one of the parties attacked in that day's issue of the paper came up the stairs.

"Where's old Weatherbee?" he asked. "I'm goin' to kill the"—

"In there," interrupted Johnny.

The man was opening the door when Johnny tackled him from behind, pulled him to the landing and threw him down to the first floor, two flights below. He was not killed outright, but died in a hospital the next day.

"So much for my football training, father," said Johnny. "By and by I'll try some other athletic features I learned at college."

Johnny sat down to write some more articles attacking other rascals. Over his desk was a rosewood baseball inlaid with gold which Johnny had won in college as a trophy. When he was rallied on his defenselessness he said he could use that far better than a revolver. During the morning he heard a quick footstep at the other end of the hall. There's lots in a step. Johnny knew at once what this one meant. Seizing his wooden ball, he went to the door. Some fifty feet away a man he recognized as a pal of the one he had thrown downstairs was coming with blood in his eyes as well as his step. Johnny twirled his trophy ball, landing it in the right eye of the comer and relieving it of all the blood there was in it.

The man didn't come any farther. Indeed, he was taken to his home, where a doctor pronounced his case a fracture of the frontal bone. He died in a few days.

These two novel encounters encouraged the good citizens and somewhat shamed the bad ones. An athletic gambler vowed he would take Johnny on his own ground. Meeting Johnny on the street, he suddenly tackled him with his right arm and began to rain blows on his face with his left fist. But Johnny had been thus held often before. He wriggled out like an eel and landed a blow on his opponent's mug that capsized him. The man started to run. Johnny followed him, every now and then getting in a kick. At last, after having several times served as Johnny's football, the man gave out and could go no farther.

Those who saw the last kick the gambler received differed as to the distance Johnny sent him. Some said it was ten feet, some fifteen, and one man, who claimed to have measured the distance with a tape line, declared that it was just nineteen feet and four inches.

The man suffered from a broken coccyx, which is the end of the backbone.

This being the third man that Johnny had put "out of the fight," a number of citizens called on him and told him that they would see him through what else might be in store for him. Johnny said to them:

"While at college I prepared myself for my beginning here. But I reckon that, having got rid of the three worst men in the town, the others will be cowed."

And so it proved. Johnny, having paved the way for his usefulness, rose rapidly in the esteem of his fellow citizens and is now one of the prominent men of the state.

Governed by Foolery.

His Way.

"The lawyer of the milkman on trial for selling adulterated milk must have been influenced in his tactics by his client's business."

"Why so?"

"I noticed he pumped the witnesses."

FISHING WITH AID OF DOGS

Unique Method of Catching Salmon Trout In Use by Ainus of Saghalin Island.

The Ainus of Saghalin island, off the Siberian coast, have a unique method of fishing for salmon-trout with dogs. The waters about the island are wonderfully clear, and from a boat the bottom of the water is distinctly visible, and innumerable salmon-trout may be seen swimming.

The Ainus, when about to fish, take with them a number of dogs. At a certain point all the men and dogs come to a halt. When half the men and dogs move further along the water's edge, about two hundred yards. At a concerted signal the dogs are started from their respective points, and swim straight out seaward in single file in two columns. At a cry from the Ainus the right column wheels left and the left column wheels right, until the heads of the columns meet. Then, at another signal, all of them swim in line toward the shore.

As the dogs near the shore increasing numbers of fish appear in the shallow water, frightened forward by the splashing of the advancing column of dogs, which as soon as their feet touch bottom, pounce upon the fish with lightning rapidity.

The animals promptly bring the fish which they have seized to their masters, who cut off the head, which belongs to him as his share of the catch. The dog that catches nothing gets nothing.

It is believed that this dog drill of the Ainus is entirely unique. It is the more extraordinary when it is considered that the dogs, many of which have been captured from the forest, are still half-wild.

ENTHUSIASTIC CELEBRATION

Norwegian Decendants Here Commemmorate 97th Anniversary of Norway's Independence.

Norwegians all over the world last Wednesday celebrated the 97th anniversary of Norway's independence, after nearly 400 years under the yoke of Denmark.

At the close of the Napoleonic wars the allied powers attempted to give Norway to Sweden in return for the latter nation's help, but the descendants of the old Vikings objected.

May 17, 1814, at the historic little town of Eidsvold, the representatives of the people signed their declaration of independence, but agreed to have a common king with Sweden.

This dual monarchy was maintained until 1905, when Norway, by a bloodless revolution, obtained complete independence.

The good old time Vikings of our city celebrated the anniversary in grand style. In addition to having the best of everything in the line of music that the city affords they were entertained by the noted Norwegian humorist Anton Sams of Minneapolis.

His songs, imitations and monologus were certainly of such a class as would appeal to anyone who could understand his language well enough to get his particular flavors.

East Side Store Closed

John Lampert closed his store on the east side last Monday and moved his goods to Melrose, Minn., where he may engage again in the mercantile business. The fact that the saw-mill may not open up this season may have had something to do with his decision to pull stakes, for his location made him specially susceptible to this influence.

STILL AN OPTIMIST

I realize that I have been severely criticised for attempting to do too many things at the same time. To this criticism I wish to make a public statement.

I walked into Thief River Falls from Crookston nearly ten years ago. I had only one great asset. That was a willingness to do. During my sojourn here I have made many friends who would be glad to see me succeed, and I presume there are also those who on account of enmity would like to see me fail.

I have done work of whatever nature stood me at hand and I am still willing to work. I have made only one boast—I walked into Red Lake County and I may walk out but if I do I hope to be able to leave some tracks behind.

From the first day that I saw this country the amount of vacant prairie land has been, in my opinion, the country's worst fault. We have had speculators come in here to buy land but it has been the exception when a good, thrifty honest home-maker came. This has very naturally caused a very slow improvement in local conditions. In order to make it possible to farm the lands in this section with more modern machinery, I have purchased a 50 horse-power gasoline tractor and trust that I will be able to make good with this. If this can be done it is my firm and honest conviction that the vacant lands within a radius of 25 miles of Thief River Falls will all be cultivated within a couple of years.

LET EACH LEGISLATOR BUY OWN PENS, KNIVES, ETC.

Oscar Arneson, chief clerk of the house during the last session of the legislature, prints a lengthy defense of himself as purchasing agent for the house in the latest issue of his paper, the Grant County Review.

Mr. Arneson answers a charge made by Rudolph Lee, editor of the Long Prairie Leader, that only a fraction of the supplies left over at the end of the session were turned over to the custodian of the capitol by giving an itemized list of supplies so turned over by him. This included desks, chairs, stationery, etc., to the value of $5,000

"As far as the house is concerned," says Mr. Arneson, "it will not be necessary to expend more than one-third for the next session, as it will be partially supplied at the beginning.

"In every other session a clean sweep has been made and the chief clerk instructed to supply from cellar to garret."

As a remedy for the present extravagant system of furnishing supplies, the chief clerk recommends that at the session each member be voted $10 to cover such items as postage, knives, pens, etc. The chief clerk chould be prohibited from purchasing them altogether, he declares.—Daily News.

OPENING OF THE EMPRESS

Most Modernly Built Theatre in the World with all Conveniences.

St. Paul's 20th century vaudeville theatre, The Empress, was open Monday May 15th. This new addition in the amusement line, will be welcomed with open arms by the people of the capitol city, as well as by the people of the state at large.

Sullivan and Considine, under whose management the new theatre will be, have spared neither time nor money, in making it one of the very best in entire America, indeed it may be said without fear of contradiction, that it is the very best in modern theatre building. It may be well for the information of the people of the state, who have not had the opportunity to visit and inspect the Empress, to briefly state, the many inovations, attractions, and beauties, associated with this theatre.

On entering the theatre one is astounded and surprised at the tasty way, in which the outer lobby is arranged. To the left of the lobby, is a Ladies public comfort room, where ladies and children may go at any time of the day, rest and arrange their toilet with the assistance of a professional ladies maid This room has all the comforts of ones own home, and it is as private. Right across the lobby is a retiring room for the gentlemen, also arranged in an up to date manner. These features should appeal strongly to the out of town people, who often come to St. Paul to spend a day, but do not care to go to a hotel for a few hours. Here they may rest, and make themselves comfortable, assured of receiving the most courteous treatment.

The best French mirrors, are arranged on every side.

Thousands of electric lights, make it the best lighted theatre in the country. Beautiful decorations, with draperies and tapestries of the very richest and rarest paterns lend a gay splendor to the interior. On either side of the theatre are arranged two tiers of boxes, three upper and three lower. A patented air system, owned exclucively by Sullivan and Considine, makes the temperature as agreeable and comfortable as the breezes from the mountain top.

A beautiful asbestos curtain, absolutely fireproof, separates the view from the stage, but raising the barrier, we find another innovation in theatre building. A sprinkling system, capable of dropping three inches of water in a half minute, a lighting system of over 500 lights twenty-seven drops, and nine complete sets of scenery, may be mentioned as being a few of the innovations. Below the stage are four private bathrooms for the lady, and two for the gentlemen performers. It may be said here that this is the only theatre in the United States, that has this advantage.

The latest and very best fire equipment, makes the theatre absolutely fireproof. All in all, the Empress represents the very best in modern theatre building. One feature that should appeal strongly to the people of the state is the length, and kind of shows presented at The Empress. One may go there and see one of the best shows on the vaudeville stage, anytime of the afternoon or evening and all for the popular admission of ten, twenty or thirty cents.

Three shows will be put on daily, a matinee in the afternoon, at two-thirty p. m., and two shows in the evening, the first seven thirty, and the second at nine p. m.

The following was the first program rendered at the new theatre.

1. Paul Conchas; Kaiser Wilheim's Military Aide.
2. Flying Russhells; Aerial Wonders.
3. Mable Wayne; Pianologist.
4. Florence Modena Co. In a Comedy Sketch "The Widow and His Wife"
5. Bert Von Klein and Grace Gibson, Late Stars of "The Mimic World."
6. Ben Smith; Singing Monologist.

LAST NIGHT'S SPEECH

In his speech last night, Alexander Irvine certainly showed that he was a master speaker and that there was no lack of entertainment for his auditors. More than this he threw out several hints that might have caused even a John D. Rockefeller to sit up and take notice and think of his fellow man.

Grays Leave City.

Mr. and Mrs. G. A. Gray left last night for Madison, Wis., where they will spend a few days with relatives after which they will proceed to Washington D. C., where Mr. Gray has employment on a government position.

The Grays have made many friends during their stay here, all of whom will regret to learn of their departure, and yet they have the best wishes of all their friends in their new home.

Washington Letter

Washington, D. C., May 17, 1911. After a somewhat prolonged discussion the House finally passed the so-called "farmers free list bill" and that measure is now reposing safely in the Senate committee on finance. It is a dead sure thing that it will not see the light of day. So far as this session is concerned. No one thought for an instant that this bill would pass both houses of Congress. The Democrats pushed it for political purposes only. The twenty-four Republicans who voted for it were for the most part Insurgents.

• • •

There is considerable talk that after the Senate gets through with reciprocity, both branches of Congress will quit it and go home. If this plan is adhered to and there is some ground for the belief that it will be, there may be an adjournment by the middle of June or the first of July. There is a disposition on the part of the Senate to lay down on everything except reciprocity and beyond this not to permit any other legislation to get out of committee rooms. True, the Insurgents will make an effort to secure the adoption of the popular election of Senators resolution. This failed by a narrow margin at the last session, and the Progressive Republicans think they have a sufficient number of votes to get the required two-thirds majority at this time. The Insurgents are going to insist that reciprocity be given a thorough and careful hearing before it is brought out of the committee. Opposition to the proposed agreement is getting stronger every day, and it is not all sure that the forces supporting the measure can muster the required number of votes to secure its passage.

There is already much talk in Washington concerning presidential candidatees for the 1912 election. ing into the lime-light in this conjecture as to the possible Democratic nominee. One thing is sure: Woodrow Wilson of New Jersey is looming into the lime-light in this in connection. The talk among the progressive Democrats is that he would make the strongest candidate the party could put up. He would have the support of the South, would have strong backing in the East, and in the Middle West he is already receiving much attention and favorable comment. One strong factor in favor of Wilson is the attitude of Bryan, the peerless one, who is said to have leanings in the direction of the New Jersey governor. Harmon of Ohio is believed to be out of the running, so far as the probability of his securing the nomination. Wilson in a recent address gave a definition of a radical which will dispell much of the misapprehension attached to one whose leanings and inclinations are in this direction. A radical, he said in substance, is one who seeks to go to the root of things. The so-called radicalism of our times, in the opinion of Mr. Wilson, is simply the effort of Nature to release the generous energies of our people. Judged by this standard the radicalism of public men who favor the initiative and the referendum and other popular government movements, is in fact nothing more or less than conservatism, using the word in its truest sense.

The new Congressional Directory is out. Every out at all interested in Congress glanced through the new publication with more than passing interest, because in this new directory the Democrats made their official bow so to speak. The auto-biographies of new members are sometimes amusing. Occasionally they go into family history and dwell on matters that the Congressman long in the service would not think of mentioning. For instance, Adam Brown Littlepage Democrat of West Virginia, extols himself and his virtues to the extent of over half a page. Adam's father was killed in a duel at Dublin, Va., in 1862. He was the youngest of five boys, and according to his own statement is a self-made man. In addition, he tells the public that he has been a hard student and a faithful worker all his life. As to whether or not he meant that he worked the votes he does not make clear. He winds up his interesting life story, which reads almost like a romance, as follows: "He bears the reputation of being a very grateful man,

LYCEUM SOLD; GRAND CLOSED

Henry Eyde Sells Popular Play House to Roy Morgan of Bagley.

The Lyceum was started about three years ago by Eyde in partnership with two other gentlemen, both of whom have sold to him before. The Lyceum has enjoyed more than its share of the photoplay patronage of the city these three years and we are assured by the new owner, Roy Morgan, that its standard of excellence will not be lowered under the new management.

Simultaneously with the change at the Lyceum there is a change at the Grand. H. C. Deiner one of the partners who fitted up The Grand about two months ago has bought out his partner, Ralph Holt, shipped the machine to Bagley and closed up The Grand. All this we understand resulted from a little legal tangle and some misunderstanding, and does not appear on the surface to have been part of the original plan. It seems Mr. Deiner negotiated a sale of his share of The Grand to Roy Morgan, who had already gained control of the Lyceum. But he failed to give his partner, Mr. Holt, proper notice and so this deal fell through and in order to square himself with both Holt and Morgan he had to buy out the former and close up The Grand. Thus Thief River Falls again has but one photoplay house going. We wish Mr. Morgan success in his venture in our midst.

Marriage Date Chosen

Miss Millie Doherty has chosen Wednesday, May thirty-first, as the date for her marriage to Mr. Jerry McCarty of Thief River Falls, and will leave on Friday for Adams, N. Dak., to make preparations for the wedding, which will occur at the home of her mother there. This morning she went to Thief River Falls, where she is spending the day with friends and making arrangements for the new home in a cozy little flat which Mr. McCarty has rented for the summer. Miss Doherty has made her home here for something more than a year during which time she has been employed as a musician at the Lyceum theatre, and has made for herself a wide circle of friends, whose good wishes for her future happiness go with her and who rejoice that she is to return to Minnesota after her marriage and to make her home in a neighboring city, permitting of frequent visits to friends here. Mr. McCarty is a popular conductor on the Soo running out of Thief River Falls, and has many friends there who will be happy to welcome his charming and clever bride to their circle.—Crookston Times.

County Books Finished

Mr. Orban Hamry who has had charge of the Rectigraph Machine for Mr. Quist came up yesterday with the last of the books. This finishes the copy work and as soon as the indexes can be completed everything will be as complete as they ever were in Red Lake. With the use of the Rectigraph machine the tanscription was completed in but a little over three months. In any other way it would have required at least a year to do this job.

THE PLAY AND COMPANY ARE PERFECTION

Speaking of "The Climax," which is to be presented to our theatre patrons very soon, a reviewer says: "But no words can portray the beauty or tell of the exquisite charm that permeates the play. It is daintily touched here and there with an artistic brush and radiates and sparkles until it is bedewed with tears. The atmosphere of home, the wholesome idea, the sweet Italian music and the clear, beautiful wording make it an uplift; a play that to be seen rouses noble thought and purposes.

KREIL—FREUND.

The many friends of Mr. Franz F. Freund and Miss Talia Kreil were aggreeably surprised Monday evening to learn of their marriage. The wedding was a very quiet affair. The parties to the happy event, without advising any of their friends of their matrimonial intentions, went to the home of the officiating clergyman, Rev. L. T. Hughes, pastor of the Presbyterian church, Monday evening and were quietly married. However, the secret was out by the time the bridal paty had returned to the bride's home and the band boys, assisted by others making more noise and less music, gave them a rousing serenade.

Mr. and Mrs. Freund are living in Mr. Freund's house in the west part of town and are receiving the congratulations of their many friends.

ACCIDENT AT HIGH SCHOOL

Wilbur Rice Loses Two Fingers and Injures Thumb on Saw.

While at his manual training work on Wednesday forenoon Wilbur Rice met with a no doubt painful, and yet what hight be termed a fortunate, accident.

Wilbur worked in his impetuous way but happened to get too close to the mechanical saw. The class had often been warned not to get too close to this saw and yet in his enthusiasm Wilbur ventured too close and the consequence was the loss of his forefinger and some injuries to the second finger and thumb.

He was immediately carried by his classmates to Dr. Gambell's office where the wounds were dressed and his nerves quited.

Let us hope that this will be a streng warning not only to the unfortunate boy who lost his finger in this experience but to all the boys of the class as well

This proves in stronger terms than words can express that the boys were actually doing manual training work for whoever heard of a man ever doing anything who did not at some time get hurt in a greater or lesser measure. Have good courage Wilbur, the care that this lesson will teach you may save a hand or an arm when you get out into actual service.

Notice To The Public In Regard To Real Estate Tax Payments.

The 1910 Real Estate tax is payable this year at Red Lake Falls, and at Thief River Falls before June 1st, 1911.

At Red Lake Falls the Townships or village levy, the school district and state levy is payable together with all special assessments such as ditch, sidewalk, road, and other taxes under the law. These taxes are payable to the old county of Red Lake this year only.

All back taxes are also payable to the old county of Red Lake.

The Pennington county tax is for county purposes only, 5 mills for county revenue, 2 mills for road and bridge, and 1 mill for bonded interest. A penalty of 10 per cent will be added to the tax on June 1st. This applies at both places, and the paying of one tax will not save penalty at the other place. If one half of the real estate is paid before June 1st, the remaining one half will run to Oct. 31st, without penalty. Tax must be for more than one dollar to take advantage of one half payments.

THINKS WOMEN SHOULDEN'T BE ALLOWED TO VOTE

Mrs. Cullums is the woman who caused consternation not long ago in the Iowa legislature by telling the law makers why they shoulden't give women suffrage.

(By Mrs. Earle S. Cullums.)

I am 35 years old and the mother of several beautiful children.

It may be perfectly just and right for women to have the ballot. But if they attain it they will be robbing themselves of their most precious possesion—their womanliness. It is impossible for a woman to step into a man's field to the extent woman of today is clamoring after without secrificing her most charming attribute and the finest side of her nature.

It is within the seclusion and sanctity of her home that woman finds her true kingdom. Through it her influence may become world-wide. That is the only way in which she can exercise real power—by keeping within her woman's sphere.

"My darling babies are more to me than any political position within the power of the state to grant. I want my memory to be one of the most inspiring and ennobling influences in their lives when they grow up. How could one of them respect a picture of a mother trailing her skirts through the mud of a political campaign, mixing up with all classes of men to cast a vote which should rightfully have been in the hands of some man? . .

I think the men are plenty capable of running this country. It would be better for women to be kept in the seclusion of a convent than to let them attain the mannish state they now seem aspiring to."

Lots of it in Thief River Falls, But Daily Growing Less.

The kidneys cry for help.

Not an organ in the whole body so delicately constructed.

DECLARES OIL TRUST ILLEGAL

Federal Supreme Court Holds Standard Oil Company to Be Unlawful Monopoly.

MUST DISSOLVE IN SIX MONTHS

Chief Justice White Announces Court's Opinion, to Which Justice Harlan Dissents.

Washington, May 16.—The Standard Oil company of New Jersey and its nineteen subsidiary corporations were declared by the supreme court of the United States to be a conspiracy and combination in restraint of trade. It also was held to be monopolizing interstate commerce in violation of the Sherman anti-trust law. The dissolution of the combination was ordered to take place within six months.

Thus ended the tremendous struggle on the part of the government to put down by authority of law a combination which it claimed was a menace to the industrial and economic advancement of the entire country.

At the same time the court interpreted the Sherman anti-trust law so as to limit its application to acts of "undue" restraint of trade and not "every" restraint of trade. It was on this point that the only discordant note was heard in the court.

Justice Harlan dissented, claiming that cases already decided by the court had determined once for all that the word "undue" or "unreasonable," or similar words, were not in the statute. He declared that the reasoning of the court in arriving at its finding was in effect legislation which belonged in every instance to congress and not to the courts.

The opinion of the court was announced by Chief Justice White. In printed form it contained more than 20,000 words.

Indulges in Cutting Remarks.

In subjecting to scrutiny the acts and doings of the Standard Oil company in the long distant past for the purpose of getting assistance in discovering intent and purpose, Chief Justice White left a cutting remark.

"We think no disinterested mind can survey the period in question without being irresistibly driven to the conclusion that the very genius for commercial development and organization which it would seem was manifested from the beginning soon begot an intent and purpose to exclude others which was frequently manifested by acts and dealings wholly inconsistent with the theory that they were made with the single conception of advancing the development of business power by usual methods, but which on the contrary necessarily involved the intent to drive others from the field and to exclude them from their right to trade and thus accomplish the mastery which was the end in view.

"The inference that no attempt to monopolize could have been intended, and that no monopolization from the acts complained of, since it is established that a very small percentage of the crude oil produced was controlled by the combination, is unwarranted.

Finds Intent to Monopolize.

"As substantial power over the crude product was the inevitable result of the absolute control which existed over the refined product, the monopolization of the one carried with it the power to control the other, and if the inferences which this situation suggests were developed, which we deem it necessary to do, they might well serve to add additional cogency to the presumption of intent to monopolize which we have found arises from the unquestioned proof on other subjects."

The court then considered the arguments that the statute could not be applied under the facts in the case without impairing rights of property and destroying the freedom of contract of trade which is essentially necessary to the well being of society.

"But the ultimate foundation of all these arguments," said the chief justice, "is the assumption that reason may not be resorted to in interpreting and applying the statute and, therefore, that the statute unreasonably restricts the right to contract and unreasonably operates upon the right to acquire and hold property. As the premise is demonstrated to be unsound by the construction we have given the statute, of course, the propositions which rest upon that premise need not be further noticed."

VETO BILL GOES TO PEERS

Fight to Curtail Powers of House of Lords Ends in Commons.

London, May 16.—The fight in the house of commons over the veto bill, to curtail the powers of the house of lords, has ended. An amendment to reject the whole bill was defeated, 362 to 243, and the measure was carried on its third reading, 362 to 241.

One Thing Missing.

A woman living in a small town, says Everybody's, purchased from an art dealer there a water color outfit with printed directions for the use. These directions included, among other things, instructions to moisten the brushes for the first time with saliva. In a day or two the dealer received the following note: [illegible] MRS. [illegible]

SAMUEL GOMPERS.

Freed From Jail Sentence by [illegible] Court.

LABOR OFFICIALS WIN IN SUPREME COURT

Gompers, Mitchell and Morrison Will Not Go to Jail.

Washington, May 16.—Setting aside the sentences of imprisonment imposed by the supreme court of the District of Columbia for alleged disobedience to a boycott injunction the supreme court of the United States held that Samuel Gompers, John Mitchell and Frank Morrison, president, vice president and secretary, respectively, of the American Federation of Labor, had been erroneously sentenced to jail on a charge of contempt of a local court.

The court unanimously held that the only sentences that could be imposed upon the labor leaders were fines. In so holding the supreme court of the United States found that the court of appeals of the District of Columbia and the supreme court of the District erred in treating the contempt proceedings as a criminal case and not a civil one. The effect of holding the proceedings a civil one was to make jail sentences impossible. Hence the jail sentences had to be set aside.

To correct the error the case was sent back to the local courts with direction that it be dismissed. At the same time the court expressly made it possible for civil proceedings to be instituted against the labor men by the Buck Stove and Range company, at whose instance the original contempt case was brought.

LINER SINKS IN COLLISION

Nearly Two Hundred Passengers Taken Off Safely.

New York, May 13.—More than 200 persons were saved from death at sea off the Virginia capes when the United Fruit company's steamer Admiral Farragut rammed and sent to the bottom the Ward liner Merida, bound to this port with 187 passengers and a full cargo of merchandise.

Roused from their comfortable berths by the shock of the collision the passengers shivered in their night clothing until lifeboats and rafts from the Merida and Admiral Farragut could be put into commission, after which they were transferred to the Farragut.

FIVE PERISH IN MINE FIRE

Others Are Saved by Government Rescue Corps.

Wilkesbarre, Pa., May 12.—The bodies of five men, suffocated by smoke from a fire in the Boston colliery of the Delaware and Hudson company at Larksville, near here, have been recovered.

The government rescue corps rescued several miners who had been overcome by smoke from certain death.

The fire was about a mile from the mouth of the shaft and the flames worked their way to the outside where there is an outcrop of coal.

DEITZ IS GIVEN LIFE SENTENCE

Defender of Cameron Dam Convicted of Murder.

Hayward, Wis., May 14.—"It is the judgment of the court and your sentence is that you, John Deitz, be punished by imprisonment for life at the state penitentiary at Waupun and that one day each year, namely, Oct 8, you shall be kept in solitary confinement."

The above sentence was imposed by Judge Reid on John Deitz, the outlaw of Cameron dam, for the murder Deputy Oscar Harp during the siege on the Deitz cabin last October.

The jury, which was out sixteen hours, returned a verdict finding John Deitz guilty of murder in the first degree and finding Mrs. Deitz and Leslie Deitz not guilty.

Deitz arose calmly and asked for a new trial on the grounds that much of material evidence had been ruled out and also on the ground of errors of law.

After Deitz' motion for a new trial had been made and denied Judge Reid asked him if he had anything to say why sentence should not be pronounced. Deitz at once launched into a tirade against the lumber trust, raising his voice in uncontrollable madness.

"Do you suppose," he asked, looking straight at the judge, "I haven't known that sooner or later the trust, because it is big and I am little, would kill me or put me out of the way? I have fought my fight and defended my home and family. I have done nothing wrong, and this conviction does not alter the fact. The trust has one creed, one law, one purpose. That is rule or ruin. They could not rule John Deitz. So they tried for six years to ruin him. It looks as if they have got what they were after."

AS COMPROMISE CANDIDATE

Nelson Mentioned for President Pro Tem. of Senate.

Washington, May 14.—The names of Senators Nelson, Lodge and Burton are mentioned as possible compromise candidates in connection with the office of president pro tempore of the senate, over which there is a deadlock between the Republican factions. The opinion is quite general now that Senator Gallinger, the caucus nominee of the regulars, will fail of election.

The Samurai's Servant.

Here is an interesting legend about an ofuda which appears as the badge of a family at Matsue. The story, as Hearn tells it, is that: "Once a servant of the family went to Ise, in despite of his master's orders to remain in the house. When he came back the samurai flew into a rage and killed him. Then the murderer felt sorry and buried the body in the garden or bamboo patch. The day after the servant came back again and apologized for his absence at Ise. You can guess the rest of the legend. When the grave was opened there was no dead body there—only an ofuda cut in two, as if by a sword slash."

Never Suffered From Bath.

There are quarters in London in which the uselessness of the bath is no novel proposition. A district nurse called at a house where there was a case of infectious disease.

"Have you a bath in the house?" asked the practical visitor.

"Yes, mum," was the reply: "but, thank God, we've never 'ad to use it."—London Chronicle.

Atmospheric Resistance.

The resistance of our atmosphere materially retards raindrops, hailstones, aerolites and all other bodies which fall through it, and were it not for the resistance it presents every rainstorm would be disastrous to the human race, as each drop would fall with a velocity great enough to penetrate the full length of a full grown man's body.

Ambiguous.

When Bilkins was away from home on a long business trip he got a letter from his wife that still puzzles him. It ended thus:

"Baby is well and lots brighter than she used to be. Hoping that you are the same. I remain, your loving wife."—Everybody's Magazine.

General Madero and Judge Carbajal Again Confer.

SOME OPTIMISTIC FEATURES

Mexican Envoy Brings Definite Propositions and Has Been Given Plenary Powers.

Juarez, Mex., May 16.—Provisional President Francisco I. Madero, Jr., at the conclusion of a conference with Judge Carbajal, the federal peace envoy, announced that there was a strong probability that peace would be restored in Mexico within a short time.

Francisco I. Madero, Sr., and Rafael Hernandez, sole survivor of the numerous go betweens who have endeavored to bring about peace, were present.

Senor Carbajal brought definite propositions which the government is disposed to consider.

The most optimistic feature of the day's developments is the fact that Senor Carbajal has been invested with plenary powers and is authorized to sign the peace agreement on certain conditions.

What the terms are has been a matter of secrecy, but it is known that the original demand of the insurrectos that they be allowed to name fourteen governors of the twenty-seven states and that they be represented in a new cabinet by four members of their party has not been received with enthusiasm by the federal government, although the question of the resignation of President Diaz has been shelved as a result of Minister Limantour's [illegible]

His Black Suit.

He was not a good card player. He admitted it. His game was pingpong. But that was no reason why his partner should be so disagreeable whenever he made mistakes.

After a particularly glaring error the pestering partner turned upon him with real anger.

"Why didn't you follow my lead?" he asked.

"If I followed anybody's lead, sir," exclaimed the novice hotly, "it certainly wouldn't be yours."

His partner snorted and subsided. But in the next hand he threw down his cards in desperation.

"Look here," he cried; "didn't you see me call for a spade or club? Have you no black suit?"

"Yes, I have," retorted the novice, with warmth. "But I'm keeping it for your funeral."

Center of the Earth.

If a shaft were sunk vertically to the center of the earth and an object suspended from a spring balance were lowered down the shaft the weight of the object, as indicated by the dial of the balance, would at first increase as the descending object approached the deeper and denser strata. After passing a certain depth, however, the weight would begin to diminish, and it would continue to diminish to the center of the earth, where its value would be zero, because the object would there be equally attracted in every direction.

Cavanagh FOREST RANGER

THE GREAT CONSERVATION —NOVEL—

By HAMLIN GARLAND

"No; I can't do that. I shall tell the supervisor, and he can act as he sees fit. For the present I'm locked up here."

The other man looked the disappointment he felt. "I'm sorry you don't feel like opening up. You know perfectly well that nothing will ever be done about this thing unless the press insist upon it. It's up to you and me (me representing 'the conscience of the east'"—here he winked an eye—"and you federal authority) to do what we can to bring these men to their punishment. Better reconsider. I'm speaking now as a citizen as well as a reporter."

There was much truth in what he said, but Cavanagh refused to go further in the matter until he had consulted with Redfield.

"Very well," replied Hartley. "That's settled. By the way, who is your patient?"

Eloquently, concisely, Ross told the story. "Just a poor old mounted hobo, a survival of the cowboy west," he said, "but he had the heart of a hero in him, and I'm doing my best to save him."

"Keep him in the dark—that's the latest theory—or under a red light. White light brings out the ulcers."

"He hates darkness. That's one reason why I've opened the doors and windows."

"All wrong. According to Finsen, he wouldn't pit in the dark. However, it doesn't matter on a cowboy. You've a great story yourself. There's a fine situation here, which I'll play up if you don't object."

Cavanagh smiled. "Would my objection have any weight?"

The reporter laughed. "Not much. I've got to carry back some sort of game. Well, so long. I must hit the trail over the hill."

Cavanagh made civil answer and returned to his patient more than half convinced that Hartley was right. The "power of the press" might prove to be a very real force in this pursuit.

As the journalist was about to mount his horse he discovered Lee Virginia on the other side of the creek. "Hello!" said he. "I wonder what this pretty maiden means." And, dropping his bridle rein again, he walked down to the bridge.

Swenson interposed his tall figure. "What do you want?" he asked bluntly. "You don't want to get too close. You've been talking to the ranger."

Hartley studied him coolly. "Are you a ranger too?"

"No, only a guard."

"Why are you leaving Cavanagh to play it alone in there?"

Lee explained. "He won't let any of us come near him."

"Quite right," retorted Hartley promptly. "They say smallpox has lost its terrors, but when you're eight hours' hard trail from a doctor or a hospital it's still what I'd call a formidable enemy. However, Cavanagh's immune, so he says."

"We don't know that," Lee said, and her hands came together in a spasm of fear. "Are you a doctor?"

"No; I'm only a newspaper man, but I've had a lot of experience with plagues of all sorts—had the yellow fever in Porto Rico and the typhoid in South Africa; that's why I'm out here ricochetting over the hills. But who are you, may I ask? You look like the rose of Sharon."

"My name is Lee Wetherford," she answered, with childish directness, for there was something compelling in the man's voice and eyes. "And this is my mother." She indicated Lize, who was approaching.

"You are not out here for your health," he stated, rather thoughtfully. "How happens it you're here?"

"I was born here—in the Fork."

His face remained expressionless. "I don't believe it. Can such maidens come out of Roaring Fork? Nit! But I don't mean that. What are you doing up here in this wilderness?"

Lize took a part in the conversation. "Another inspector?" she asked as she lumbered up.

"That's me," he replied—"Sherlock Holmes, Vidocq, all rolled into one."

"My mother," again volunteered Lee.

Hartley's eyes expressed incredulity, but he did not put his feelings into words, for he perceived in Lize a type with which he was entirely familiar—one to be handled with care. "What are you two women doing here? Are you related to one of these rangers?"

Lize resented this. "You're asking a good many questions, Mr. Man."

"That's my trade," was the unabashed reply, "and I'm not so old but that I can rise to a romantic situation." Thereupon he dropped all direct interrogation and with an air of candor told the story of his mission. Lize, entirely sympathetic, invited him to lunch, and he was soon in possession of their story, even to the tender relationship between Lee Virginia and the plague besieged forest ranger.

"We're not so mightily disinterested," he said, referring to his paper. "The Roundup represents the new west in part, but to us the new west means opportunity to loot water sites and pile up unearned increment. Oh, yes, we're on the side of the fruit and alfalfa grower, because it pays. If the boss of my paper happened to be in the sheep business, as Senator Blank White is, we would sing a different tune, or if I were a congressman representing a district of cattlemen I'd be very slow about helping to build up any system that would make me pay for my grass. As it is, I'm commissioned to make it hot for the ranchers that killed those dagoes, and I'm going to do it. If this country had a man like Cavanagh for sheriff we'd have the murderers in two days. He knows who the butchers are, and I'd like his help. But he's nailed down here, and there's no hope of his getting away. A few men like him could civilize this country."

Thereupon he drew from three pairs of lips a statement of the kind of man Ross Cavanagh was, but most significant of all were the few words of the girl, to whom this man of the pad and pencil was a magician, capable of exalting her hero and of advancing light and civilization by the mere motion of his hand. She liked him and grew more and more willing to communicate, and he, perceiving in her something unusual, lingered on, questioning. Then he rose. "I must be going," he said to Lee. "You've given me a lovely afternoon."

Lee Virginia was all too ignorant of the ways of reporters to resent his note taking, and she accepted his hand, believing him to be a sincere admirer of her ranger. "What are you going to do?" she asked.

"I'm going back to Sulphur to spread the report of Cavanagh's quarantine." Again that meaning smile. "I don't want any other newspaper men mixed up in my game. I'm Lonesome Ned in stunts like this, and I hope if they do come up you'll be judiciously silent. Goodby."

CHAPTER XXI.

WETHERFORD PASSES ON.

SOON after the reporter left Cavanagh called to Swenson: "The old man can't last through another such night as last night was, and I wish you would persuade Mrs. Wetherford and her daughter to return to the valley. They can do nothing here—absolutely nothing. Please say that."

Swenson repeated his commands with all the emphasis he could give them, but neither Lize nor Lee would consent to go. "It would be heathenish to leave him alone in this lonesome hole," protested Lize.

"I shall stay till he is free," added Lee. And with uneasy heart she crossed the bridge and walked on and on toward the cabin till she was close enough to detect the lines of care on her lover's haggard face.

"Stop!" he called sharply. "Keep away! Why don't you obey me? Why don't you go back to the valley?"

"Because I will not leave you alone—I can't! Please let me stay!"

"I beg of you go back."

The roar of the stream made it necessary to speak loudly, and he could not put into his voice the tenderness he felt at the moment, but his face was knotted with pain as he asked, "Don't you see you add to my uneasiness—my pain?"

"We're so anxious about you," she answered. "It seems as though we should be doing something to help you."

He understood and was grateful for the tenderness which brought her so near to him, but he was forced to be stern.

"There is nothing you can do—nothing more than you are doing. It helps me to know that you are here, but you must not cross the bridge. Please go back!" There was pleading as well as command in his voice, and with a realization of the passion his voice conveyed she retraced her steps, her heart beating quickly with the joy which his words conveyed.

At sunset Redfield returned, bringing with him medicine, but no nurse. "Nobody will come up here," he said. "I reckon Ross is doomed to fight it out alone. The solitude, the long trail, scares the bravest of them away. I tried and tried—no use. Eleanor would have come, of course—demanded to come—but I would not permit that. She commissioned me to bring you both down to the ranch."

Lee Virginia thanked him, but reiterated her wish to stay until all pos[illegible]

Redfield crossed the bridge and laid the medicines down outside the door.

"The nurse from Sulphur refused to come when she found that her patient was in a mountain cabin. I'm sorry, old man. I did the best I could."

"Never mind," replied Cavanagh. "I'm still free from any touch of fever. I'm tired, of course, but good for another night of it. My main anxiety concerns Lee. Get her to go home with you if you can."

"I'll do the best I can," responded Redfield, "but meanwhile you must not think of getting out of the forest service. I have some cheering news for you. The president has put a good man into the chief's place."

Cavanagh's face lighted up. "That'll help some," he exclaimed. "But who's the man?"

Redfield named him. "He was a student under the chief, and the chief says he's all right, which satisfies me. Furthermore, he's a real forester and not a political jobber or a corporation attorney."

"That's good," repeated Cavanagh, "and yet," he said sadly, "it leaves the chief out just the same."

"No; the chief is not out. He's where he can fight for the idea to better advantage than when he was a subordinate under another man. Anyhow, he asks us all to line up for the work and not to mind him. The work, he says, is bigger than any man. Here's that resignation of yours," he said, taking Cavanagh's letter from his pocket. "I didn't put it on file. What shall I do with it?"

"Throw it to me," said Cavanagh curtly.

Redfield tossed it over the hitching pole, and Ross took it up, looked at it for a moment in silence, then tore it into bits and threw it on the ground.

"What are your orders, Mr. Supervisor?" he asked, with a faint, quizzical smile around his eyes.

"There's nothing you can do but take care of this man. But as soon as you are able to ride again I've got some special work for you. I want you to join with young Bingham, the ranger on Rock creek, and line up the Triangle cattle. Murphy is reported to have thrown on the forest nearly a thousand head more than his permit calls for. I want you to see about that. Then complete your maps so that I can turn them in on the 1st of November, and about the middle of December you are to take charge of this forest in my stead. Eleanor has decided to take the children abroad for a couple of years, and as I am to be over there part of the time I don't feel justified in holding down the supervisor's position. I shall resign in your favor. Wait now!" he called warningly. "The district forester and I framed all this up as we rode down the hill yesterday, and it goes. Oh, yes, there's one thing more. Old man Dunn"—

"I know."

"How did you learn it?"

"A reporter came boiling over the ridge about noon today wanting me to give him the names which Dunn had given me. I was strongly tempted to do as he asked me to—you know these newspaper men are sometimes the best kind of detectives for running down criminals—but on second thought I concluded to wait until I had discussed the matter with you. I haven't much faith in the county authorities."

"Ordinarily I would have my doubts myself," replied Redfield, "but the whole country is roused, and we're going to round up these men this time sure. The best men and the big papers all over the west are demanding an exercise of the law, and the reward we have offered"— He paused suddenly. "By the way, that reward will come to you if you can bring about the arrest of the criminals."

"The reward should go to Dunn's family," replied the ranger soberly. "Poor chap, he's sacrificed himself for the good of the state."

"That's true. His family is left in bad shape"—

Cavanagh broke off the conversation suddenly. "I must go back to"— He had almost said "back to Wetherford. "My patient needs me!" he exclaimed.

"How does he seem?"

"He's surely dying. In my judgment he can't last the night, but so long as he's conscious it's up to me to be on the spot."

Redfield walked slowly back across the river, thinking on the patient courage of the ranger.

"It isn't the obvious kind of thing, but it's courage all the same," he said to himself.

Meanwhile Lize and Virginia, left alone beside the fire, had drawn closer together.

The girl's face, so sweet and so pensive, wrought strongly upon the older woman's sympathy. Something of her own girlhood came back to her. Being freed from the town and all its associations, she became more considerate, more thoughtful. She wished to speak, and yet she found it very hard to begin. At last she said, with a touch of mockery in her tone, "You like Ross Cavanagh almost as well as I do myself, don't you?"

The girl flushed a little, but her eyes remained steady. "I would not be here if I did not," she replied.

"Neither would I. Well, now, I have got something to tell you—something I ought to have told you long ago, something that Ross ought to know. I intended to tell you that first day you came back, but I couldn't somehow get to it, and I kept putting it off till—well, then I got fond of you, and every day made it harder." Here she made her supreme effort. "Child, I'm an old bluff. I'm not your mother at all."

Lee stared at her in amazement. "What do you mean?" she asked.

TO SUCCEED KING MENELIK

Grandson Proclaimed Emperor of Abyssinia.

Addis Abeba, Abyssinia, May 16.—Prince Lidji Jeassu, grandson of Emperor Menelik, has been proclaimed emperor of Abyssinia. The coronation ceremonies will take place later.

Prince Lidji was proclaimed heir to the Abyssinian throne on May 18, 1909, when he was thirteen years of age. Two days before he had been married to Princess Romana Onok, the seven-year-old granddaughter of the late Emperor John and a niece of Empress Taitu. At the same time Ras Tessama, who had taken over the affairs of the empire because of the incapacity of Emperor Menelik, was appointed guardian of the heir apparent. The regent died on April 13 last.

Menelik was born in 1844 and has long been in ill health.

MRS. TAFT REMAINS IN NEW YORK CITY

Illness Compels Delay In Returning to Washington.

New York, May 16.—President Taft left for Washington over the Pennsylvania railroad. Dr. Evans, the Taft physician, told him just before he left the house of his brother, Henry W. Taft, that Mrs. Taft's condition had shown such improvement that it would be safe for her to follow him Thursday morning.

Mrs. Taft first complained of feeling ill Saturday night when attending the dinner given here by the Academy of Political Science, at which the president spoke. Sunday morning it was considered inadvisable for her to leave the house. The president went to Harrisburg alone and returned immediately after he had addressed the convention of Railway Trainmen.

Mrs. Taft's illness was said to be a recurrence of the nervous trouble from which she suffered two years ago, although in a less severe form.

Mrs. Taft is quite cheerful and desired to return to Washington with her husband. She was persuaded, however, that it would be better if she remained here for two or three days. Miss Helen Taft, her daughter, will remain with her.

BOMB WRECKS BUILDING

Many Families Routed by Explosion at Chicago.

Chicago, May 16.—An explosion partially wrecked a three-story flat building at 771 Bunker street and drove twenty-two families into the street.

Windows were shattered for blocks around and a large section of the thickly populated Italian district was terror stricken.

Labor difficulties are believed to have been at the bottom of the explosion.

The explosion tore off the roof of the structure, cracked the walls and shattered the windows, but no one was injured.

CATTLE RAISERS FEAR PACT

Texas Man Tells Senators It Will Ruin Beef Trade.

Washington, May 16.—When the hearing before the senate finance committee on the Canadian reciprocity bill was resumed H. Cowan, representing the Cattle Raisers' association of Texas and the National Live Stock association, was heard. He entered upon a discussion of the free list bill and predicted ruin for the cattle raising industry of the country if the duty on meats was removed. Argentina is capturing the American beef trade, he said, and Canada, too, could compete with the United States for that trade.

THOUSANDS ARE DESERTING CITY

Huge Revolt Slated to Occur in Canton, China.

MAY COVER WIDE AREA

Revolution Said to Be Led by Relatives of High Chinese Officials Educated in Japan and Has Strong Financial Backing—Many Foreign Warships Now Anchored in the Harbor.

Hongkong, China, May 16.—There are alarming rumors of a revolutionary uprising at Canton and the surrounding districts. Europeans in the Shamien, the foreign district of Canton, are prepared to leave. The restlessness is widespread and tens of thousands of persons are fleeing from the disturbed section of this city.

The revolt is said to cover a wide area and to be led by relatives of high Chinese officials who have been educated in Japan. More than $1,000,000 is said to be available to the rebels. The leaders of the revolution in Formosa and Annam declare that they have enough dynamite to blow up the city of Canton.

Decapitations of rebels and suspects occur daily in Canton. The relatives of those executed do not dare remove the bodies from the streets and as a result there is a horrible situation.

Two British gunboats, one French, one German, one American and one Italian, are now off Canton. Another German gunboat is going to the city carrying two Maxim guns and a supply of ammunition.

The political unrest is general throughout South China.

WOULD HELP DEITZ AGAIN

Milwaukee Defense Committee Ready to Offer Assistance.

Milwaukee, May 16.—"If John Deitz wants us to go ahead we shall reorganize our Milwaukee Deitz defense committee at once," said George Schultes, chairman of the committee. "We shall then hold a monster mass meeting and start raising funds with which to help him. All of the people who were against him from the beginning are for him, now that the verdict of the jury has been made. We will be able to raise a large amount of money for the defense.

"I had a long talk with W. B. Rubin, and he told me that if Deitz wanted him to he would take charge of the case again. There is a lot about this Deitz case that the public don't know all about. I could tell much if I wanted to. I have a lot of letters from Deitz to me about it. If it is necessary I shall publish them in order to get justice for John Deitz."
